THE GREAT FIRE IN THE CITY: RUINS OF HABERDASHERS' HALL.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

HAMPTON COURT OLD BRIDGE.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

COLUMN FOR THE CURIOUS.

In a conflagration of a calamitous extent (the particulars of which were given in this Journal last week) one of the oldest of our civic halls—that of the Haberdashers' Company—has been almost reduced to roofless walls and blackened rafters. The site was bequeathed to the company in the reign of Edward IV. by a worthy citizen and haberdasher, with houses and premises, in the whole about half an acre of ground, of which there is a plan among the company's documents; it is now part of Gresham-street West, formerly opposite Goldsmiths' Hall. The ancient hall of the Haberdashers, with many of the company's records and property of much value, were destroyed in the "Great Fire of 1666. This must have been a severe loss to persons of trade from the Parliament commissioners having held their meetings in it during the Interregnum. In the year after the Fire, 1667, the rebuilding of the hall was commenced by Wren. Herbert says—"It has nothing to grant description; indeed, it much needs rebuilding." The banqueting-room was lofty and handsome, with a screen and music-gallery. However, Wren's poor work was redeemed by a fine full-length ceiling-piece, so beautifully kept many years since, said "a common-place piece of vulgar lath and plaister put up in its stead." There were, besides the banqueting-room, houses, and offices, and a chapel. In the late Corporation improvement a portion of the front premises of the hall in Gresham-street was removed, and to widen the thoroughfare. A new entrance was then constructed, with two richly-carved oak staircases, besides a kitchen, with gas and other cooking-stoves, ovens, &c. The hall was hung with portraits of George I., George II., and Queen Caroline, Prince Frederick, when a youth (father of George III.), and Augusta, his consort; also portraits of benefactors, including Robert Aske, who left the company £30,000, to build and endow almshouses at Hoxton and Widdrington, Northumberland, amounting to also bequeathing £18,000 for benevolent purposes. The urns of distinguished members were emblazoned on the windows, the last of which, on the south side, had been completed this year, but are destroyed; and the front of the gallery is described as decorated with some of Gibbons's carvings. The pictures, we are glad to say, are saved with many interesting memorials, though not of artistic merit. We regret that so many of the City Halls are closely adjoin warehouses of the most dangerous kind, and are thus more liable to be destroyed by fire. In times when the halls had their gardens like the Temple, it was not felt.

By the archæological turn taken by the recent proceedings of the British Association at Bath we are induced to travel back in the record to cause a few of the glories of the metropolis of Bath to scarcely second to London in the interest of its ancient remains. No city in England can produce a more beautiful series of relics than is deposited in its Literary and Scientific Institution, which proved very attractive during the late congress. Here are votive altars and monumental and funereal stones; glass, Samian, Castor, Kelvy, rings, fibulæ; metal cults, patinæ, and weapons; cinerary urns, Roman pottery; coins, Roman pottery and glass; bullæ and Roman lamps; querns and fine-tiles; Egyptian mummies; Egyptian sculpture, presented to be carried into the Exodus; a Babylonian brick, Roman coins and medallions, &c. In the Assembly Rooms were gathered for the evening of the Conversazione many interesting items of precedent and old plate. Here was the Beckford copy of Italian workmanship, from Horace Walpole's collection; a very fine Saracen Chalice vase; rare old-copied Crown Derby, manufactured for Queen Charlotte; a careful of old Wedgwood ware; elegant Oriental vases and enamelled filigree; a Cloisonne enamelled Oriental vase; a pair of delaiky-grey, made in 1676 by Jo. Dwight, and fashioned of enrich eggshells. Among the silver were some curious Elizabethan stoneb-plate; the Bedford cup; elegant old Anglo-Saxon; the Bath Corporation plate, including the loving-cup presented to the city by the Duke of George III.; and the silver-gilt pieces besides ancient maces from Southampton, Mr. Mayor, &c. A print a collection of Bibles, including Cranmer's Bible, 1541; Tyndale's Testament, 1529; Tyndale's Pentateuch, 1530; Coverdale's Bible, 1550; and a copy of the Apocalypse block-printed, with an illuminated title-page, an edition of which is believed only two copies are extant. There were also an Anglo-Norman translation of the Bible, 1520; Mr. Rossell's well-known collection of Bath maps, &c.; and, framed under glass, of the oak blazed at the city's feast to Parliament introducing Nelson, on his return from glory, to see, as a middshipman, besides a local Nelson bust, and the scientific collections was a well-arranged collection of bones, taken from the famous Bauwell caverns. Mr. Bolch's beautiful bust of the Prince Consort, with the inscription written by her Majesty the Queen, has been placed upon a pedestal, wreathed with fresh olive-leaves.

The discussion which followed the reading of Mr. Cranford's paper "On the Source of the Supply of Tin," brought up some interesting statements. Mr. Cranford stated that the ancients of ancient Europe could only have derived tin from Britain, the Malayan countries, or Northern China. With Sir George Cornewall Lewis, Mr. Cranford disbelieves in the Phœnician voyage for tin to England—and his views as to the probability of tin having been procured from two opposite directions—the Malayan peninsula, and from the extremest point, Egypt, struck Sir Charles Lyell as throwing light upon a great difficulty—the manner in which whence the ancients drew the constituents of their bronze—tin and copper.

He was of opinion that the Phœnicians obtained their tin from Cornwall, and referred to the intrigal of the Carthaginian vessel at the mouth of Harbour, which Sir Henry James had shown us in all probability to east of the Straits; he really conveyed a belief that he had found the Cassiterides Rennel, which, it would seem, had been for 2000 years isolated twice, or thy to new, from the mainland, and rather than the Scilly Islands of Scilla. Sir Henry James, by the aid of a diagram, exhibited the character of the navigation mentioned by Herodotus, and the course of the Phœnician trade of Britain. Sir John Bowring said, with regard to the Phœnician tin trade with England, that in the Phœnician language the word Britannia for the Phœnician language; while when in Phœnicia he found traces of a former connection with Britain in the existence of a certain sort of pottery and in the walls made up of straw, so common a mode of separation in the West of England.

Thursday proved the grand field-day for the archæologicals, when the whole business visited Salisbury Cathedral, Stonehenge, &c., and stayed along the White Horse, on the hill beyond Westbury, stood out. From the east, and could be seen for many miles. At Salisbury, the cathedral was admirably explained by the accomplished to the city surveyor of Bath. They then drove to the site of Old Sarum, where he growing of the offshoot of the great under which the Conqueror erections took place. About the time of the Reform Bill, the true was rather torn down or blasted by gunpowder, but one branch remained, which has grown into the present tree. Mr. Swayne pointed out the Roman roads in the district; and the mound on which stood the fortification—Roman or Saxon—commanded a splendid view of the city. Its ancient name was Sarisbodunum, of which the early bishops wrote only Sar, which is Rourish at Old Sarum, which was taken by the Romans—hence Sarum. Then followed a long drive over Salisbury Plain to Stonehenge, where the excursionists assembled within the inner ring of the temple, when Mr. Fergusson read a long and able paper on the mechanical structure and probable uses of Stonehenge, less ancient than Avebury, and supposed to be the work of a second century prior to the Christian era. Mr. Scarth concluded with noticing the remains which Dr. Thurnam had covered, in 1861, upon one of the trilithons, which has been read "L. V. [Lucius Victor ?], and another mark in shape like a broad letter H. Professor Rawlinson had little to say to the archæological question: the letters were unlike anything found in Phœnician, Greek, or Etruscan antiquities: they could not have been British, nor pure the Roman invasion; in all probability, the letters were either Roman, or subsequently to the Roman.

One of the brightest wits of our day used continually to inveigh against the spreading practice of giving commonplace incidents a comic colour. Whether the critic of the following picture of the old bridge at Blackfriars aimed at this distinction it is hard to say:—"Although it (the bridge) has been coming down of its own accord, for the last thirty years and more, it takes a good deal of pulling down after all." The writer then details the cost, and winds up with this sage inference:—"Seeing that in spite of all that outlay the Corporation has had to build a new bridge, the money may be said to have been literally thrown into the Thames." This is droll enough, and would be equally true were the Corporation gifted with prevyance, or did it build once a perfect one, while much more so we further than their brethren who rejoice not in such worldly distinctions.

THE OLD BRIDGE AT HAMPTON COURT.

We have engraved a View of the old wooden toll-bridge at Hampton Court, which is now about to be removed by order of its proprietor, Mr. T. W. Allen, of Newlands Park, Buckinghamshire, who has resolved to build a new one of iron. The Act of Parliament for the building of the bridge was obtained from Henry Boleyn, obtained in the reign of George II., and that bridge was opened in December, 1753. It was replaced by the present bridge about thirty or forty years ago. The original entirety of timber has eleven openings, varying from 25 ft. to 29 ft. span at water-line. Its width between parapets is 17 ft., the length in the main is considerable; and the gradients are steep. The total length of the bridge is 375 ft.; but the piers are so wide that they occupy 90 ft. solid of the available space. The new bridge, from designs furnished by R. M. C. Murray, of 27, Great George-street, Westminster, will be of iron, and will consist of three spans of 100 ft. each. It will have five openings, varying from 66 ft. to 76 ft. span. The width will be 26 ft.; and, notwithstanding that the headway for navigation will be higher than that of the present bridge, the gradients will be much more favourable. The height of the new bridge will be the same as that of the present one, but the space occupied by the piers will be only 60 ft. instead of 90 ft. The works of the new bridge were commenced last spring, and are far advanced towards completion. The cylinders have been sunk on each side of the present bridge, and the main girders are being erected. The total cost of the present parapets, so that the public will have the uninterrupted use of the present bridge almost up to the completion of the new one. The whole expense of this new and improved communication, which will be a great advantage to the neighbourhood, is defrayed by Mr. Allen, who has also just completed the rebuilding of the old village of Walton-on-Thames, under the direction and from the designs of the same engineer. Mr. Murray, and by the same contractors who are now erecting this work, Messrs. Hennett, Spink, and Else, of Bridgewater.

TANKARD PRESENTED TO THE NOTTINGHAM (ROBIN HOOD) RIFLE CORPS BY THE DUKE OF ST. ALBANS.

A HANDSOME tankard has been manufactured at Coventry by the Skidmore Art-Manufacturing Company for the Duke of St. Albans, who intends to give it as a prize to be competed for annually by the Nottingham Robin Hood Rifle Corps, of which his Grace is the Honorary Colonel. In this country of art-workmanship the Skidmore has departed from the ordinary character of such designs, and boldly produced a peculiar, novel, and elegant piece, rich, massive, and effective. The body of the tankard is of iron, lined with silver. Externally it is decorated with massive ornaments of silver and gilt bronze, which are saw-pierced, enamelled, set with precious stones, and elaborately engraved. Filigree is also used to enrich the gilt bronze surroundings and letting of the precious stones. The domelike cover is surmounted by a noble crystal; and crystals likewise adorn the sides, as well as the handle. The grip of which is formed of ivory, inlaid and braced with ferrules of silver, on which the names of the successful competitors in the annual contests will be engraved. Taken as a whole, the tankard is a rich, massive, and satisfactory, the variety of decorations and colours enhancing its beauty. It has been manufactured in this work of the ancient and modern methods of working metals and their ornamentation and exemplified and united.

THE PICKETS BEFORE PETERSBURG.—The special correspondent of the Times writes from "in front of Petersburg," on the 6th ult., says:—"Knowing perfectly well the nature of the ground, my army can afford to keep a measure, with the enemy. Hence the more than usual sensibility, at the present time, of the opposite pickets. On the night I understand, the pickets opposite each of the same leg, and during the war and the peace question was discussed with the same fluency as the day one of our pickets, a Scotchman by birth, said to one of them, 'Well, sit down on the end of that log there, and I'll tell you all about it.' He then had a little, and on what is generally the case, and then went on shallowing his detail. Presently the sealed picket heard, and then called out to the other end of the log, 'Hallo, Johnny, is that the same time asking, 'Is that you, Yonk?' On being answered affirmatively, he said, 'Then I'll be with you presently.' Upon this he crawled over the log, and by the by of the dinner and sent to Richmond, and went back to his own beat. In the dinner-order Confederate would be very much astonished at such a meal. The other evening word was given out to our pickets by the officer of the day that a flag of truce from Richmond was coming down, and a party meeting in the rebel camp, and none of our boys were invited over, but they talked to 'us' all the same. The flag of truce party, on their return, began to get water out of the same springs, and the pickets traffic more or less in tobacco, newspapers, coffee, and sugar. This intercourse is carried on and carried on perhaps even more persistently and extensively, though a little differently, at the present time. The pickets are now ordered never to fire on each other without due notice, but it is understood that all captures by mute signals are to be considered fair. Hence every one is on the alert somewhat shy of each other, and consequently the most of their traffic is carried on in writing. They get a newspaper, and, instead of reading it, they look for instance—where notes of negotiation and commodities of exchange are written—and, having read it, they write a few lines on the back of it, and very coolly explain the modus operandi:—'Please leave the watch at this (a plug of tobacco) to writing the letter. Before you leave, will you give me a plug of tobacco for the knife.' Please mail this letter (an open letter) to my mother, in Kennedy. Put on one of your coats, and bear in one of ours and a piece of tobacco in return. What's the chance to get some coffee of you?' These notes, with or without the article referred to, as the case may be, are left at the nearest post, while the person leaving them retires, and the other person comes up and examines them and replies; and so the traffic goes on. Sometimes the bargain and exchange are made in person, without the trouble of notes. One of the pickets told me that during one of the fiercest of the Weldon Railroad fights the pickets on a portion of the lines near by, not immediately engaged, were all lying down a thick bush together, and carrying on their petty trafficking, not a little frank conversation on the state of affairs is known to be carried on between the more intelligent soldiers on picket."

MEMBERS OUT OF PARLIAMENT.

There can hardly be any verity in an announcement which has been recently made with an air of authority that a dissolution of Parliament is fixed for the ensuing spring. At least, there are few of the signs and symptoms of a general election to be detected in the addresses which duy by day are allowed to drip from the mouths of the elected in the case of the elected. At such a time, and with such an event imminent, it might be supposed that all the arts of pleasing would be put forward, and that the fountains of sympathy, and respect, and consideration which naturally germinate in the breasts of members when they are about to be put to the crucial test of the hustings would have come out strong. But the invitations to the pall would have been given in all their various terms and meanings. But—not to speak of a possible—parliament with the prospect of crushing in the electoral mill dawdle out strings of commonplaces which do not exist even either from a sense of duty or from a sense of honour. At such a moment, if ever, a public meeting, a body of electors, would have addressed the country through them, and have used even a farmers' club for the purpose of enunciating a policy and a creed. Probably this last is the real reason why members wander up and down talking in private meetings, and would be glad if they could be allowed at the gatherings which they think it incumbent on them to attend to whistle, as they stand, for want of thought.

Let, however, justice be done to Mr. Disraeli. It is true that, on the face of it, in his late speech at Aylesbury he delivered himself of unwonted banalities; but when Buckinghamshire short wool should be converted into long, forgetting that as you lengthen the wool you appreciate the mutton; invented another "blue ribbon" besides the garter, the order of which, when, as such a success as to tempt a pluglary; and once, when he found himself touching on the field of politics, hastily to the Cotswold Downs. Dorsetshire, the talk was of turnips and beans as nearly pure and simple as possible, and sounded very much as if it had been got out of a penny cyclopædia or a farmer's magazine that morning. But all through his speech one fancies that one traces a vein of sarcasm, a mental reservation in favour of his real topics, a sense of which is conspicuous by its absence between Grosvenor-gate and Palace-yard. If he did not outwardly mock those who were enthusiastic at the idea of his come to deep agricultural ethics from a gentleman who bears a greater resemblance to Cleopatra, any other type of an Egyptian, than to what the representative of the field of politics, would be disposed to be in the future. In the course of things, there was a covert sneer at the dullard assembly which took him for granted and hesitated between the Scylla of Conservatism and the Charybdis of Reform, in proper place, unless round and into a spirit of pugnacity, he can be very slow, and as cut-and-dried at a when there is a flashy manifesto he was only delivered of a proxy light.

Two of Mr. Disraeli's colleagues in political allies have been doing better, because they have been riding their hobbies, in Yorkshire. Sir John Pakington has been addressing the people to a considerable extent at York; and Sir Stafford Northcote, after having poured out a hope at extract of on the subject of education at Leeds, joined Sir John at the ancient metropolis of Yorkshire, and addressed the electors of the same subject in the departments of the Social Science Association. Sir Stafford's wedding has applied the joke to the members of this institution, and, in defining the qualities of an individual, has come to the degree of comparison—dull, very dull, a social science man! Now, do not let it be thought that we desire to imply any sympathy with this petty insolence if, in order to give an interest to the name of the social science congresses at York, it is necessary to say that on the chief platform, in the Guildhall, Sir John Pakington, attended the legislature one after day, on one side of the president sat Sir John, and on the other Sir Stafford, and it was deemed that the culminating point of excitement was reached when Sir Stafford came to the front level, and they were esteemed to speak like oracles whose words were golden and whose sentences were precious stones, and carried on a walk, when, having occasion to criticise the opinions of and to express his difference with, a clergyman, who, being a Roman Catholic priest, was taken to be an antagonist scarcely worthy of Sir John's steel, the Canon suddenly rose and left the room. This was a direct personality by birth or adoption, who fears the face of no man, sprang up and, with unabated vigour, delivered a protest against what he had been told, because he had prepared it specially as a direct personality against Sir John's notions on the subject of education. In the contest between the practised Parliamentarian and the Canon, who by virtue of his function is deemed not to be explosive, the victory was all on the side of the latter, and the Canon, Chapter, Dean, Bishop, and Archdeacons—were made proud of a colleague that dared such an encounter, although there might be persons who might not think much of his courage in thus defying the enemy that he unnecessarily taken the measure of his opponent.

It was Mr. Walter, and we, who convicted Mr. Disraeli of the agricultural mistake, set down above, about long wool making poor mutton; for, at Wokingham, the member for Berkshire was fain to make slightly merry with the chief of the Social Services, in default of more cheering matter. For anything we know to the contrary, Mr. Walter may be a practical farmer of turnips and sheep as Mr. Disraeli himself; but, somehow, it seems that when he came to talk about mutton and wool he had got up his facts from a butcher; at any rate, he has made up his mind about mutton, just as people used to say that the only thing Sir Robert Peel ever took up his mind about was the Corn-question about, which he was the Parliamentary debater of two other courses, was rubbish. There is some tradition about Mr. Walter's connection with the press that an invitation to eat it is a thing not to be despised; so for once we have the comfort of hearing a political speech this autumn speaking of something which he really understands. The speech of Mr. Walter, however, which Mr. Walter understands, and he is perhaps aware that his name has been the subject of the educational services of the Social Science Congress this week, and that he has been practically set up as the leader of the movement in reference to the Parliamentary grants to national schools.

We are glad to welcome Mr. G. W. Bentinck, of West Norfolk, in his old vein again. He has evidently been to seaside to suffer neuralgia, ill-health, was often absent from the House, and scarcely ever rose to his feet without unconsciously giving the hateful point of view of politics, social life, and men. In his last address to his constituents he was himself again, and has been out-Bentincking Bentinck, to the great delight of the upper bacon-fed class, who recognise in him a professor of many of the fine old prejudices which used to go so far towards the composition of a British Squire. Bentinck's Bentinck, in the speech in his speech ourious specimens of his illogical deductions and of that peculiar temperament which makes him at his time of life a fine young, and, still more, to declare, that the penny postage is a great social evil, and which enables him to say that the penny postage has led to the first step steps in the track of Parliamentary reform will somehow or other lead to the picking of the pockets of the landed aristocracy. An excellent and worthy gentleman this, however, who, when he is parading all sorts of what seems to be bitterness of spirit, has always a twinkle about the eye of a mischievous mouth which shows that in all the while under the influence of an under-current of kindly feeling, good humour, and a sense of the ludicrous. Bentinck, Mr. Cobden, and Mr. Bright—which are his true natural characteristics. Even as a politician and a member of Parliament, in these days of smooth identity of thought, and consistency, such a politician, though ranking in his "genus" as the dodo does amongst birds, is well worth preserving as a curiosity. The House of Lords is one of the few remaining to rescue from pale and soul-less uniformity.

At a distribution of prizes for acts of clevtedness and courage, made at Brussels a short time ago, a medal was awarded to a boy named Daniel, five years of age, for the following act of intrepidity:—A fire broke out in the house in which he resided with his parents, and on seeing the room invaded by the smoke the child ran panic-stricken into the street; but a moment later, recovering himself, he had left in the room his brother, infant aged six months, he rushed back through the smoke, and, snatching the child from the cradle, carried him off in safety.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

Life and Writings of Joseph Mazzini. (6 vols. Vol. I. Smith, Elder and Co.) There are men, many in number and personally considerable, who are of opinion that Italy owes more than she can ever repay to the political sagacity and unselfish patriotism of Joseph Garibaldi. Yet Garibaldi himself, when he was receiving the homage of all classes of Englishmen, professed himself the pupil of Joseph Mazzini. He called Mazzini his political father. It were strange, then, if a self-seeking, calculating, unattractive, fond of dark counsels and secret assassinations, should have begotten a self-sacrificing, guileless, simple son, who loves the sun to shine on his deeds, and fights in broad daylight against countless odds. Nevertheless, these are those who would endorse Garibaldi as the blameless hero and stigmatise his teacher as the base assassin. Perhaps the anomaly may be explained in the usual way—Garibaldi was successful. Mazzini was unsuccessful. It is unfortunate for unfortunate Mazzini's character that an ugly fact stated by himself remains on record: he undoubtedly employed, himself, a young man to whom he avowedly meditated assassination. The "little dagger with a lapis-lazuli handle," was no "theoretical dagger," but a weapon of cold steel, intended by Mazzini for the chivalrous Mordrey. Not even the eloquent indignation of Mazzini can conceal from us that, though he may be himself incapable of assassination, he is not incapable of assisting a would-be assassin. Let casuists determine the exact point at which the line of demarcation between guilt and innocence is sufficient for us to say that unless Mazzini be ready—and he seems neither ready nor willing—to prove that, in certain cases, assassination is no crime, he must be held, and be considered himself, guilty of complicity in Gallenga's matter. He should rather grieve that he has given occasion than be indignant that the occasion has been seized upon to generalise, as unhappily it is the fashion to do, from what may be insufficient data. With the exception of the slur just spoken of, it is impossible to read this autobiography (for as yet we have but three volumes) of Mazzini's life and writings without coming to the conclusion that he was a worthy teacher of Garibaldi, and of "Young Italy" in general; that his talents, his energy, his eloquence, and his consistency deserve unmitigated admiration; that his failures and his failures more than compensate for his egotism; and that Italy may have had wiser and more temperate friends, but never a sincerer patriot than Joseph Mazzini. He must be sneered at by those practical persons who quote the proverb to the effect that "half a loaf is better than no bread," and think that Italy has been sufficiently united a kingdom of Italy the metropolis of which is in Piedmont, and the existence of which is at the will of a French monarch; but surely some excuse may be made for him who has striven to put the whole nation of an Italy free not only from the Alps to the Adriatic, but wherever the Italian language is spoken, with Rome for its capital, and the people for its sole Sovereign; to whom a despot is an utter abomination; and who even a Constitutional Government can only look at in its head, seems a peculiar institution fitted only for peculiar peoples.

The Ballad Book. Edited by William Allingham. (1 vol. Macmillan and Co.) The ballad was the novel, the romance, the thrilling story of olden time; for the days have never been over our present lack of ballad-makers be comforted; for if we have lost our ballad we have gained our novel, our sensation novel, in the place of what every reader of ballads will allow to be by no means uncommon amongst our forefathers—to wit, the sensation ballad, wherein the guilty carry the strange knowledge of their own wickedness unrevealed upon to make up for defects in construction, in rhythm, and in rhyme. Mr. Allingham has discovered with, we have every reason to believe, punctilious care and persistent diligence about four score of our best old ballads. They have been printed and published in so sightly a shape as to have made us wonder therefore that a disgust of the modern prose development of the ancient ballad may not is hereby recommended to relieve his hearers from the fear that they are defiled of old English balladry. A more pleasing little volume it were hard to obtain.

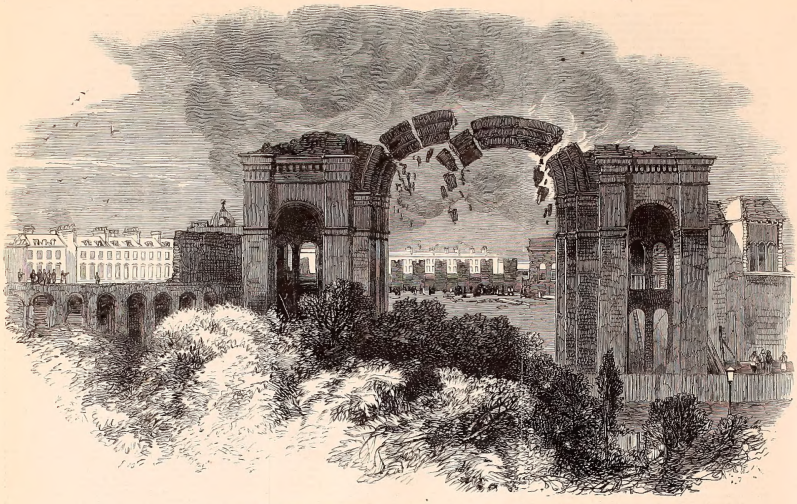
"Le Sport" at Bodon. By Percy Fitzgerald. (1 vol. Chapman and Hall.) The subject of this pleasant volume is by no means new, but it is one which is always interesting, and has been treated by the author in a superior style. Those who have not, as well as those who have suffered or enjoyed, experience of steeplechasing will find their devotion at those Continental shrines where the blind goddess is worshipped; who have been initiated in the rites of rouge et noir and of roulette; and who have watched the countenances of the votaries of their fellow-devotees, will acknowledge the truthfulness, the humour, and the picturesque power of Mr. Fitzgerald's pages. The author shows both the tragic and the comic side of his subject, and we write we could hope that he will not be long before would disinclin his readers from becoming eye-witnesses of the latter.

Testimonies Concerning Slavery. By M. D. Conway. (1 vol. Chapman and Hall.) The subject of this pamphlet is one which has little interest for the majority of Englishmen now. Some years ago they declared it to be inhuman, and paid twenty millions to be rid of the disgrace. And John Bull is said not to part easily with his money if a patriotic heat the darings of conscience rather than open his purse-strings. We may, therefore, consider it quite certain that John Bull abhors slavery and is convinced of its heinousness; and if he reads the high-priced articles of Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, it is to gratify his morbid tastes and not to satisfy his calm judgment. There may still an implacable minority who believe that slavery is the fore-ordained condition of the negro; that God—contrary to express declaration in the Scriptures—is a respecter of persons, preferring a sinful white man to a pious black man; and that woolly hair, ebony skin, protuberance of heel, and a peaceful, cheerful, grateful disposition reduces a human being to the level of a brute. To them, also, testimony for or against slavery can be of little interest; they consider the heathenish manners of whom it was said, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead;" if they hear not Clarkson, Brougham, and Mrs. Stowe, neither will they be persuaded by Mr. Conway. And yet Mr. Conway speaks with more than usual authority: he is a Virginian, a slaveholder, a descendant of a son of a slaveholder; his father was one of the kind masters, and yet he and they were delighted to escape. The most interesting portions of Mr. Conway's book are those in which he describes the manner in which he assisted his father's slaves to escape through Baltimore about a year and a half ago, in which he combats the opinion that they are much more despised and maltreated in the North than in the South, in which he insists of amalgamation, and in which he expresses his prospect of success the North has in the present sanguinary strife. His recapitulation of the number of purchases upon slavery were, in our judgment, unnecessary; and how far he was justified in divulging his father's slaves to escape we do not care to argue; we put down whatever value it attached to his book on the fact that it is the production of a heretofore Secessionist from Virginia, who boldly announces his views concerning the origin and probable result of the conflict now raging on the American continent.

Father Clement. By Canon M'Gregor Allan. (2 vols. Newby.) Mr. Allan's object (to judge from his dedication) in writing this novel was to serve the cause of toleration; but it is a question whether his well-meaning, if confiding, readers should not would learn from it to loathe Roman Catholics, laugh at Dominicans, and pooh-pooh proselytism. Established religion, That may be a form of toleration; but the toleration which we have always considered admirable is based upon respect, not disgust or disregard, for the denominations of others. Nevertheless certain delicate subjects connected with the confessional, and with the celibacy of the Catholic priesthood, are handled in a plain and highly-coloured style that many scenes are painted to which it were dangerous to introduce the inexperienced. Mr. Allen may fairly be granted to have written with vigour and skill sufficient to interest his readers, but we cannot think that the way to promote a feeling of toleration towards Roman Catholics is to represent the Roman Catholic religion as the fruitful source of every crime whereof human nature is capable. Perhaps he excludes Roman Catholics from his code of toleration; but, if so, why should his book be devoted almost entirely to them? It is true that in the end Father Stirling, though a Roman Catholic, keeps up, regardless of religious differences, a close friendship with a Protestant; but, then, Father Stirling has long ceased to be a Roman Catholic in anything but name; and our world is kindled against a religion which has nipped in the bud an early love, has estranged father and mother, friend and lover, has hurried three human beings to an untimely grave, and has been the cause of horror upon horror. A harlot and a forger, if we recollect rightly, are the only two amongst the prominent characters who come scatheless out of the general wreck; and they have nothing to do with religious matters. The author of "The Attaché" is a very humble opinion, neither happy in his choice of a subject, wholesome in his tone, nor successful in his object.

Son and Heir. (3 vols. Hurst and Blackett.) An admirable work, both in conception and execution. The plot is remarkably clever, and the characters are drawn with unusual ability. It is regrettable, though we fear it is true to life, that the bold, scheming woman and the vain, frivolous woman should meet with worldly prosperity, whilst noble, candid manliness and unsophisticated, trusting, womanliness should be doomed to days of bitterness; and such is the case in "Son and Heir." The author describes the secret which consigns to lingering torment a high-souled gentleman and the lady of his love; yet gives readers should learn it for themselves. It will be discovered about the middle of the second volume, by a soul from whence it is always too late—exquisite as is the author's description—than to watch the agonies of a bosom-friend. The moment of discovernment is almost too awful; it is frightful to contemplate the martyrdom of a human being, and the utmost suffering is death by inches, and for whom the revelation of what he hates, hates, and despises would bring relief, were pride not almost not even many the lady of his love, and he must not tell her why. But the author has a way of comforts in his letter, and that she who loved him loves him still, does not doubt his honour, even if she does not know. Then there is some dreadful spell upon him, and requires no explanation, it seems to us, from the pen of a writer so clever and perfect faith we never drawn.

Bit of Breed. By Jean Macé. (1 vol. Saunders, Otley, and Co.) Mrs. Getty has translated and edited this the first part of M. Macé's "Histoire d'un Bon Enfant," and it is properly appreciated she promises to give us the second. It is to be hoped, therefore, that it will not be long take care what they are about and not despise the roods which Mrs. Getty promises to follow. The "Bit of Breed" is a charming little story, addressed to a child, written with charming grace and genuine French piquancy. Yet into the conversations of the little boy, which has been pronounced "fearfully and wonderfully made," there has been introduced wonderfully made, and though the book is intended for children, it is not a book for children to read. It is unquestionably a doubt, that technical terms should be introduced; but science sees nothing to be gained by the introduction of terms which the general understandings is scarcely attainable. To talk to a child about its stomach is bad enough, but even worse is to address to a child about its goblins. Why not call it the "food conduit," or "food conductor," or more simply still, "food pipe?"



THE FARM.

AGRICULTURAL dinner speeches deepen in interest with the fall of the year. Mr. Bennett has brandished no "charmed weapon" among the bucolic revellers at Castle Rising, but he has kept a very sharp watchword to the bold men of Bucks; but he has descended to the other from the Chair, and has left room for the voice of the local constituents in the course of a very pleasant speech, to keep their eyes open for the Tory wolf in the sheepskin with Cotswolds. Before the sentiment is a week old. Mr. Walter, M.P., is heard in reply from an adjacent county, exhorting his constituents not on any account to "shoot the Tory fox," and to keep their powder dry for the coming election, with their mutton to wool.

The Agricultural Journals, which have not nearly reckoned for very much at this season, have quite "come with a rush," thanks to Sir Harry Verney, who has fairly set up the knckes of the highart agriculturists by avowing himself a "Free Trader" in corn, as regards Cheshire—a man, in short, who is for having everything taken, like Mr. Bright's Irishman, "without money and without price." He considers rivers to be the sole and natural outfall for drainage. The world is indebted to Sir Harry Verney for the loan of his yacht, from the chair, at Bedover, last week, and thus summed up the case for Cheshire—Draining, boning, bread-breasted bulls (i.e., "Butterflies and all such nonsense." Sir Harry Verney is "all for" boiling bullocks. There was a great deal of discussion upon all these points, as well as the nature of the soil in the Vale of Aylesbury, which Sir Harry Verney longhorn is the cross for Cheshire) took issue on the broad breasted bull. The discussion was quite useful, as a formation was peculiarly valuable to correct the narrow-chested native breed, and encourage the long disease. The whole proceedings were characterised by high good-humour. Sir Harry Verney, indeed, is the very beau ideal of "Captain Mortis" of the county, contributed "The Song of the Spade," and the whole scene does credit especial feeling to the stanza—

A toll fed on rushes, stayed upon that,
Is worth more to the dairy than three that are fat.

Pending this little guerilla warfare against sheep and shorthorns as mere adjuncts to the dairy-cow, Mr. Stratton, of Biddenham, in Bedford, near Knutsford, had a sale of part of his herd and flock. The cows and heifers averaged £31 5s. 6d., and the ewes and lambs £3 6s. 9d. averaged £31 6s. 9d. They were in quite a natural state, and had been kept in high-bred condition without any of the fuss and fidget the Duke of Manchester, Lord Ducie, and Mr. Torr, of Mottram, in behalf of Lord Derby, who is anxious to supply his tenantry with "Derby sheep." Mr. Torr's sale was a failure. Mr. Wm. Bowcher, of Bangor gave the highest prices—viz., 43 gs. for Medora, a very good cow, and 40 gs. for a couple of several prizes; as well as 120 gs. for Master Warlaby, whom he has evidently found not resign without a sharp struggle. A shorthorn or a hunter at 60 or 70 guineas is a very good thing in the market, but a bred sire at three, will invariably kindle up the energies even of a Northumbrian squire. The Duke of Northumberland is not quite accustomed to public speaking" as he started, except in connection with more dairy-cows. But they grew quite excited, and signified the same by tremendous cheering and waving of hats when the Duke of Northumberland declared the result. Rhor was sold at 39 gs. to Mr. Statter, and won £5 for him at the Bath Show. Cheltenham Show, July 26, was cheap, and looked very well; but the fact of there being no calves in the yard, and the sheds, and the accommodation for cattle given to Garibaldi (17,919) effectually frightened purchasers. The result, however, was very satisfactory. THE COLONEL LAMB BLOCKADE-RUNNER, BUILT IN THE MERSEY.

On the 13th ult. an exciting race took place off the port of Liverpool, between the paddle-wheel steam-boat Douglas, lately placed on the Isle of Man line, and the Colonel Lamb, a steel-built paddle-wheel steam-ship, from the yard of Messrs. Jones, Quiggin, and Co., Sefton-street, Liverpool, and the largest steel ship that has yet been built. The two vessels were moored abreast of each other at the Prince's Stage about eleven o'clock in the morning. Great interest was felt in their competition. The Douglas had proved herself one of the fastest boats built in the Mersey; the Colonel Lamb was a new boat which had never been tried at sea, built of steel, and was supposed to be much more fragile than an iron vessel, whilst her great steam power was considered likely to shake a few of her rivets. The result, however, has proved that the Colonel Lamb is a splendid sea-boat; she was as stiff as could be desired, and there was an entire absence of the vibration that is frequently found in boats of her size and power. Her length is 281½ ft.; beam, 36 ft.; depth of hold, 15 ft. 6 in.; and tonnage, 1788 o.m. She will carry 2500 bales of cotton, and sufficient coals for five days, with a draught of 8 ft. 9 in. She left the Prince's Stage about a quarter to twelve o'clock, under the command of Captain Lockwood, and, when outside the Rock, lay to until 12.38, when the Douglas came up to her. "Full speed ahead!" was the order given on board the Colonel Lamb, and the race continued for two hours and thirty-one minutes, during which time the Colonel Lamb gained on the Douglas about four miles. The engines of the Colonel Lamb are by Messrs. James Jack and Co., of the Victoria Engine Works, Liverpool; they are a pair of oscillating engines, of 320-horse power, and have surface condensers. The paddle-wheels are on the feathering principle, of 25 ft. diameter. By log the ship ran sixteen knots and three-quarters, or about nineteen miles, an hour against a head wind and a heavy sea. The builders of the Colonel Lamb have launched during the present year two sailing-ships and six steamers of steel, and one sailing-ship and two steamers of iron, being eleven vessels, of an aggregate measurement of 9390 tons; and have now on the stocks nine paddle-steamers of steel and one iron screw, the aggregate burden of which is about 10,200 tons; besides one composite ship of 1000 tons burden.

Our Engraving of the Colonel Lamb is from a drawing by Mr. William Woods, of Liverpool.

THE PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN IN AMERICA: GREAT M'CLELLAN MEETING IN UNION-SQUARE, NEW YORK.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION IN AMERICA.

GREAT NUCLEAR MEETING IN UNION-SQUARE, NEW YORK.

MR. C. D. SHANLY, of New York, whose sketch of an open-air political meeting in that city we have this week engraved, writes, under date of Sept. 9, as follows:—"The nomination of General M'Clellan by the Democratic Convention for the office of President of the United States was ratified last evening in this city by an immense Democratic mass meeting in Union-square. This meeting was called in the name of 'the friends of M'Clellan, in favour of free speech, a free press, and the rights of the people, and all who hope in peace and reunion.' Five large stands were erected on the south side of the square, and from these, which were brilliantly lighted with Chinese lanterns, the orators of the night, surrounded by their friends, held forth to some hours to the assembled multitude. The German stand was placed exactly in the centre of the square, and at this stand the scene was very striking. A powerful calcium light had been placed in a distant part of the square to enable a person to see to concentrate its rays upon the bronze statue, illuminating it with a ghostly appearance, and projecting its shadow, sharp and black as a silhouette, upon the buildings behind. Above it a perfect wreath of lights hung in festoons against the dark sky, and bursting directly over the statue, descended upon it in a shower of sparks; and which the honest Germans, who are great M'Clellan men just now—would grasp each other by the hands, accepting the omen as one favourable to their nominee. The meeting was of a most enthusiastic character, and although a considerable degree of popular faith in the new candidate for the presidency, I send with this a Sketch of the scene described above. The boys that figure in it are trading in M'Clellan badges, which they dispose of at fifteen cents apiece. A terrific accident occurred in the course of the evening, by the bursting of the connection of the wires, which caused the death of at least two persons, fearfully scorching and maiming several others."

The Queen has awarded the decoration of the Victoria Cross to Lieutenant-Colonel William Gordon Stables, late Assistant-Surgeon, William Temple, and Lieutenant Arthur Frederick Pickard, of the Royal Artillery; and to Ensign Alexander Thurston Dove, late Assistant-Surgeon, Stagpoole, of the 57th Regiment. In each case the award is for distinguished service in New Zealand.

The Duke of Cambridge, on the representation of the heads of the Royal Engineer corps, chatham, has authorised the establishment of an additional number of the Engineer establishment of Portsmouth, to consist of an architectural and estimating school, for the instruction of the officers and other members of the military and civil engineer portion of the staff at military engineering.

The War Department having determined to arm the whole of the infantry service with breech-loading rifles, and invited plans and tenders from engineers who will undertake to convert the present Enfield rifles into breech-loaders, thirty-six firms in this country, France, Belgium, &c., have sent in plans and specifications, which are now under the care of the Royal Arsenal, at Woolwich, for examination by a select committee appointed for that purpose.

The squadron of vessels composing the sailing reserve in Chatham Harbour having been inspected by the officials connected with the Master Attendant's department, and the unfavourable report forwarded to the Admiralty of the condition and probable value of each ship, a subsequent order was received directed a number of them to be at once commissioned for the smaller class of frigates and sloops, to be sold out of the service, their contents being ordered to be rendered useful for further consideration by the Board. The large class of line-of-battle sailing-ships and fifty-gun frigates are not affected by this order.

The Channel Fleet, under the command of Rear-Admiral S. C. Dacres, left Portland on Saturday week on a cruise, partly of an experimental trial of sailing and steaming. During these trials the Enterprise-transport sloop, four guns, beat the Ariadne, 26 guns, nearly half an hour 100 yards. The Defence, iron ship, sixteen guns, and the Research, iron-cased ship, four guns, were about 1000 yards astern of the Ariadne, and the Hector, iron ship, thirty-four guns, and Prince Consort, iron-cased ship, about 2000 yards astern of the Defence. In the trial sailing match the Ariadne, which lasted ten hours, and also under full steam and sail, the Defence did well. The fleet then proceeded to Plymouth Sound for the purpose of making further experiments.

THE VOLUNTEER MOVEMENT.

The twelfth, or St. James's, company of the 22nd Middlesex (Queen's Westminster) held their annual prize meeting at the Wormwood-scrubbs range on Thursday week. Captain and Adjutant Cuthbertson, V.D., was won by Corporal Bulland, and Mr. Bidgood's prize, a purse of £5, by Private Jones. The aggregate was also remarkably good. A silver cup, given by Lieutenant Carbonell, by Private Southam; a silver cup, value £4 4s., presented by Mr. Bidgood, by Private Bulland; a silver cup, value £4 4s., by Private Crosbie; a proof print, £3 3s., Private Harvey; £5 5s., Sergeant Bedwell; £3 3s., Private E. Jones; £3 3s., Private Farrell; £3 3s., Private Griffiths; £3 3s., Private Bryant; £3 3s., Private Arnott; £3 3s., Private Hall; £3 3s., Private Cockburn; £3 3s., Private Bowden; a silver cup, value £6 6s., Private Abercrombie; £3 3s., Private Smith; £2 2s., Private T. Abbott; a tankard, Private B. Bowler; prize, £3 3s., Private Elford.

Two Post Office companies of the Civil Service Rifles had a battalion drill at Harrow, on Saturday, with the school and town corps. The drill, which was conducted by Captain Du Plat Taylor, was of a very instructive character, the movements being executed with creditable steadiness and precision, and the skirmishing and firing being particularly good.

At a meeting, on Wednesday week, of the Commissioners of Lieutenancy of the City of London, Alderman Louis presiding, a letter was read from the War Office inquiring whether it was intended to recommend that the 4th London Corps should be clothed, and whether there was any objection to the transferring of Adjutant Henderson to the 6th Middlesex Corps. It was stated that the number of members of the corps had been greatly reduced, and that at the present time there was nothing like the proper complement required by the War Office regulations. A report of the standing committee, to whom had been referred the consideration of the circumstances in connection with the corps, was brought up, and they recommended that the corps should be disbanded. The report of the committee was agreed to, and the corps was disbanded accordingly. The following gentlemen were then appointed as duly qualified to be returned to the Home Office for promotion:—London Rifle Brigade: Henry Joseph Stevenson, to be Assistant-Surgeon. 3rd London Rifle Corps: Major Alfred Bate Richards to be Lieutenant-Colonel; Reuben Smith to be Ensign.—Communications were read from Major W. De Carteret's commission in the 3rd London Corps.

The presentation of prizes won by the 12th Surrey at the annual rifle meeting, held at Bisley, on the 6th inst., took place when the prizes were presented the members were put through a variety of exercises and movements by Major Cocrane, the commandant, by Private Ford; which were presented, as follows:—First Match; First prize, a silver cup, value £5, presented by Mr. Bidgood, won by Private Southam; second prize, a silver cup, presented by Major Cocrane, the commandant, by Private Ford; third, a silver cup, presented by Mr. Bidgood, by Sergeant Bedwell; fourth, a proof print, £3 3s.; fifth, by Corporal S. Gray. Second Match: First prize, a silver cup, value £4 4s., presented by Lieutenant Carbonell, won by Private Southam; second, Sergeant Hogg; fourth, by Corporal Ripblick. The prize for the greatest number of points in the above was taken by Corporal Abercrombie. The first prize—The 12th Surrey challenge cup, with a gold medal, has to be won for three successive years by the same member of the corps, and has been won by him and his name engraved upon it. Should he win it on two successive occasions in the intervening year, he will become entitled to the challenge prize by Private Turner. Prizes presented by W. Cotterell, Esq., Corporal Jackson; third, Private G. Marcotte; fourth, Corporal Bovall. The consolation prizes were presented by Lieutenant Jackson, and won by Private Bulland; the Blackford, Private Rook, and Lieutenant Durdant.

The first annual meeting of the Kent Volunteer Artillery Association was held on Thursday week, at the battery at Gore, near Faversham, when the following were the prizes won by the non-commissioned officers and privates:—The 10th Kent (Rochester) corps were—Grenwood and Faversham, second; Battery Sheerness and Queenborough, third; Battalion Battery, Rochester, Chatham, and Gillingham, two detachments. The first prize, £20, was won by the 2nd Kent (Faversham) corps; the second, £25, by Sheerness; the third, £25, by the Gravesend fourth detachment; the fourth, £15, by the Faversham detachment. Lieutenant-Colonel on inspection of the 10th Kent (Royal Arsenal) Artillery took place last Saturday evening, at Gore, when the 2nd Kent (Faversham) corps, commanded by Colonel Ellis, marched from the Royal Arsenal at five o'clock; and at the termination of the inspection, which was conducted by Major Boxer, he expressed his utmost satisfaction, and stated that it would be his duty to forward a favourable report of the corps to the Horse Guards. The prize-meeting of the 19th Kent (Rochester) took place at the Dolce Vita, Chatham, on Saturday afternoon, when £20 was won by the same person two successive years to become his property), with £5 added by the officers, was won by Sergeant-Major Hollingsbee. The second prize was contested by the Major of Rochester, J. G. Naylor, Esq., with £5 added for extra prizes by Captain Hollingsbee, and was won by Sergeant Hollingsbee, the first. For a silver cup presented by William Mansfield, Esq., with £5 added by Captain Hollingsbee, the first prize was won by Corporal Cuthbertson, who became the winner.

The first match this season between the 2nd (Faversham) and the 3rd (Dorchester) companies of the Dorset volunteers took place at Dudding Dale, Faversham, on the 9th ult., the Dorchester company winning by fourteen marks. The second match was shot on the 10th inst., at the range on the Wareham corps. The totals were as follow:—Dorchester, 544; Wareham, 488.

On the 21st ult. the first and second companies of the 1st Devon met at Bovey Tracey, when the following were the shooting prizes:—The challenge cup, with five sovereigns, given by the Right Hon. R. P. Collier, Esq., M.P., was won by Private Wyatt. The second prize, a five guineas, must be won by three prizes three consecutive years before becoming the property of the winner, was won by Sergeant Lieutenant Horne; won by Corporal Hartnell. Third prize (£2), also given by Lieutenant Horne, was won by Private Reuben Hooper. Fourth prize, given by Mr. Justice Wayndham Barr, M.P., was won by Private Neale; the second prize, given by Captain Hayman, was won by Private Hartnell, the first, second, and third extra were won respectively by Sergeant Stapleton, Corporal Hartnell, and Private Neale. Lieutenant Lethbridge's prize, to be the property of the member winning it two successive years, was won by Ensign Hayman. Captain Hayman's prize, a pair of pistols, was won by Private Jones for an extra prize, value £4, offered by Mr. Parsons, Esq. It was borne away by Corporal Hartnell. The best secretary's number's prize—a binocular field-glass—was won by Mr. C. E. Rhodes.

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

ASTRONOMICAL OCCURRENCES IN OCTOBER.—Throughout the month Mercury (in Virgo) is a morning star, and Venus (in Virgo and Scorpio) and Jupiter (in Libra and Scorpio) are evening stars. On the 16th, Mars (in Taurus) passes the meridian at 5h. 33m. a.m.; and Jupiter sets at 5h. 29m. a.m.; and Saturn (in Virgo) passes the meridian at 11h. 45m. a.m. Uranus (in Taurus) is stationary on the 4th at midnight. The Moon's changes—First quarter, Oct. 8, 3h. 37m. p.m.; full moon, Oct. 16, 10h. 36m. a.m.; last quarter, Oct. 22, 11h. 27m. a.m.; and new moon, Oct. 30, 5h. 28m. p.m. The eclipses of Jupiter's satellites are also visible in October, through the planet being too near the sun. The constellations Cassiopeia, Andromeda, Pisces, and Cetus will be on the meridian about the middle of the month, and Aries at the end. On Oct. 30 there will be an annular eclipse of the Sun, invisible at Greenwich; partial at the Cape of Good Hope, and about a little before sunset. This eclipse will be visible from the Pacific Ocean.

THE WELL WHICH DISCOVERED ITSELF.—The "marble merchant's house" (so termed on account of the many pieces of marble found there) is the subject of investigation at Pompeii. The well was discovered in a subterranean spot protected by a vault. The well is about forty-five metres deep, and has in it a considerable quantity of limpid water. The atmosphere of the place when first opened was found to be highly charged with carbonic acid, which was dissipated when a draught was established by lighting fires. The water was also charged with carbonic acid. It manifested an alkaline reaction when tested, due to the presence of carbonate of potash, evidently derived from the varieties of feldspar and volcanic matters of which the soil is composed. The density of the water was found at the temperature of 70 to 25 deg. cent., oscillated between 1·0010 and 1·0013. When carefully evaporated it left a small saline residuum, in which were detected the presence of lime, potash, soda, silica, and traces of iron, carbonic acid and chlorine, and a very minute quantity of organic and ammoniacal acids. M. De Luca proposes to lay before the Academy of Sciences at Paris the exact analysis of the water and residuum found in the well, which appears to be interesting a position.

OPIUM AND ITS ALKALOIDS have been submitted to experimental research by M. C. Bernard. He has reported the results to the Academy of Paris, in which, it seems, some light is cast on the question will be found. It is no introduction to a work in which he proposes to treat, in a general and comparative manner, of the physiological and toxical properties of six of the most active principles of opium—viz., morphine, narcotine, codeine, narcotine, papaverine, and thebaine. The first three of these possess the power of occasioning sleep; and all young animals, including man, are much more subject to the soporific influence than adults. The principal properties of the alkaloids are—1, soporific action; 2, exciting or convulsive action; and, 3, paralysing action. In regard to the first property M. Bernard has been led to arrange the alkaloids as follow:—In the soporific order—1, narcotine; 2, morphine; 3, codeine. In the convulsive order—1, thebaine; 2, papaverine; 3, narcotine; 4, codeine; 5, morphine; 6, narcotine. In the paralyser order—1, codeine; 2, papaverine; 3, narcotine; 4, morphine; 5, narcotine; 6, narcotine. In conclusion, M. Bernard points out, by the example of opium, that from the same plant we obtain principles the action of which on the animal economy is very different, and, in some cases, quite opposite. Hence, several substances which may be derived from the same plant, Thus, the hydrocarbate of narcotine, for example, possesses a very high convulsive activity, although it is the least poisonous of the six bases which been examined. This shows the value of chemical researches like M. Bernard's.

FLAX, HEMP, JUTE, SUNN, ETC.—Mr. Alexander J. Warden's new work on "The Linen Manufactures" necessarily contains interesting botanical matter relating to the linen of the ancients and modern and copious commercial details, but also very valuable statistics and information respecting the above-mentioned fibres, now of such great national importance. In regard to flax, we instruct respecting its botanical characters, various species, methods of culture, the chemical constituents of the plant, and the soils in which it is grown, British and foreign, the preparation for manufacturing purposes, &c. The history of the gradual introduction of the now important jute into Britain, and the methods of bleaching, spinning, and dyeing it, will be quite new to the general public, who may not be aware that it has led to great commercial prosperity in Dundee, which has declined of late years in Belfast as in Lancashire. Jute is the fibre of the Corchorous olitorius (pot herb, or Jew's mallow) and Corchorus capsularis; both cultivated in Bengal. Bulbs grow from five to fourteen feet high. The former derives its name from the leaves having been used by the natives as a kind of spinach. The latter yield the fibre known in commerce. Sunn hemp (Crotalaria tenera), sunn, belongs to the family of plants yielding the true pulses of India. The fibre obtained from its stalks has been employed to cordage, but for textile purposes it has given way to its formidable rival jute. Mr. Warden gives interesting practical instructions respecting other fibres which may hereafter become of national importance. My. Warden's book is undoubtedly the best hitherto published on the subject, and will form a companion to Ure's "History of the Cotton Manufacture."

ELECTRICITY OF BATALIA.—In a paper presented by Batalia read to the Academy of Sciences at Paris, M. Gaugain refers to the common classification of colouring bodies according to the system which they have of becoming charged by friction with either positive or negative electricity. In many instances no physical law is to be found. A list of these bodies, and the order that each takes positive electricity with those which follow it and negative with those which precede it. But the author has found many exceptions, and M. Gaugain has been led, therefore, to ascertain whether the metals also might not be influenced in the same line. By progressive experiments he has succeeded in forming the following list. As the metals are nearly all negative with sulphur and positive with gutta-percha, M. Gaugain, in forming these substances, obtained a part of the needful terms of comparison :—

Aluminium, Iron, Platinum, Antimony,
Zinc—cadmium—tin, Copper—bismuth, Mercury—gold—palladium.

Each of the metals on this list, M. Gaugain says, is positive with respect to those which follow and negative in respect to those which precede. Those placed in the same line have no action on the same metals placed in the nearest together. In the Comptes Rendus, vol. lix., No. 11, will be found details of the experiments and further remarks.

"THE REPTILES OF BRITISH INDIA," by Dr. Albert Günther, of the British Museum, is the new work issued by the Ray Society—six hundred pages, seventy-six engravings on wood, from excellent drawings by Mr. John Ford. This work is very important, being the first attempt to comprise the whole of the reptiles of India in a single volume. Dr. Günther has availed himself of the great number of unrivalled materials in the British Museum, and of his own industry. When the entire collection of reptiles of the East India Company was transferred to the British Museum, in 1858, upon the Company's dissolution, the trouble of naming its contents and embodying them in the national collection. This would only be done by a critical revision of the whole of the specimens, and the description of about 300 species were ultimately raised to above 400. The work, although especially devoted to the reptiles of India, contains almost what is known of the reptiles of Afghanistan, Thibet, and Northern China. Systematical and alphabetical indexes render it peculiarly to the wants of the student.

THE ELECTROLYTIC LAW in regard to the current exercising an exterior action has been verified by M. J. L. Soret, who has forwarded the results of his researches to the Academy of Sciences at Paris. The object, in order to explain the exterior action of a current, such as the development of mechanical action in current of induction, in accordance with the fundamental theory of heat, recourse is had to the hypothesis proposed by Helmholtz, Roscoe, Clausius, and others, to the effect that the electricity is transported exact in this special case. In order to prove this, M. Soret undertook the comparison of the quantity of decomposition of water in the voltameter with currents which give rise to the exterior action, making use of Rohnkorff's apparatus for the production of powerful electricity. After numerous experiments in order to ensure exactness, he arrived at the following results, which confirm the correctness of the law under the conditions of the experiment, presenting a great resistance, formed of a Daniell's battery, a magnetic compass, a voltameter or apparatus of compensation, and Rohnkorff's apparatus, he found that the weight of copper deposited in the voltameter is in every proportion to the intensity of the current, and that the latter is exact in the same manner. The interruptions of the Rohnkorff apparatus is produced by a pendulum, which is always work relatively to platinum was employed instead of copper.

AN ATMOSPHERIC STEAM-HAMMER is now being exhibited at Birmingham, under the superintendence of Mr. Bourne, and which is described in the Journal of the Society of Arts. We give the chief points:—An air-piston, worked by a steam-piston, has a shaft, fixed to a cross-head, which is the framework of the machine. The receiver communicates with a cylinder, in which a piston works, and which is fixed to the top of the hammer, so to it may be fitted a head varying in form. By means of a wheel and screw or lever the hammer is raised to any height required for the hammer; and the receiver is so constructed as to be able to store up, or to speak, a large amount of power for a single blow, when required to be struck. This hammer, it is said, will cost much less to keep in repair than other steam-hammers.

MISSING SEDIMENTARY FORMATIONS.—In the Journal of the Geological Society is a full report upon this subject, which has long been known that formations are frequently absent from their places in the vertical order, and although a fact familiar to geologists, is not (as Lyell, &c.), yet little notice has been taken of the fact, except mere allusions. Dr. J. J. Bigsby was therefore led to reduce to order a great deal of information on the subject, collected from the writings of the most eminent geologists. The missing formations hold a high and important place to a result of one of the constructive processes of the earth's crust, and the work is still going on. He concludes that they are among the several consequences of emergence and immersion, themselves the effect of one of the great cosmic agencies, oscillation of level, which may be gradual or paroxysmal, through all the degrees of velocity and energy. Those interested in the subject will rejoice in the details given respecting them "brown here and from many volumes of gaps or blanks, which," "by their magnitude and number, become a great feature in the earth's crust, expressive of unity of design in time and space."

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

SUBSCRIBER.—The volume containing a selection from the late "I. B. of Bridport's" beautiful problems is now before us.

LA WILL BOURNE.—We think the moves suggested would be sufficiently decisive.

J. F. S. W.—Kieseritzky's gambit consists of exactly two moves. In no case can a king capture a man as guarded. It matters not that the protecting piece is unable to move; his capture is equally forbidden.

CHESS.—Mate will be declared,—There is no mistake in the problem or in the solution; the opening move of Black is necessarily limited to the single move of the solution, and the move by pawn Black is necessarily limited to the single move of the solution.

G—Le., R standing on g 5 Rook or takes the Queen. This you unaccountably omit in your solution of No. 1,672, which renders the solution incorrect.

J. K. Bolton (Liverpool).—Your more spontaneous; in the game before us all inferior moves offer Black's final fourteenth move.

ALPHA.—Your solution has already arrived too late; but we do not remember the diagram.

R. C. and J. W., Adelaide, South Australia.—We have played over the games with much pleasure, and shall be glad to receive more specimens of your skill. We have not yet received a single set of the problems for the long feature of the Adelaide Chess Club.

ALEPH.—If your solution of No. 1,672 arrived in time for No. 1,673 in time for insertion, it would certainly have appeared in the list. In Your "several sets of problems" this is glaringly wrong, but we cannot manifestly offered space to show why all the defective solutions are wrong in detail.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR OCTOBER.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 1281.—VOL. XLV. SATURDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1864. WITH A SUPPLEMENT, FIVEPENCE

"VILLAINOUS SALTPETRE."

THE inhabitants of parts of South America are so accustomed to slight shocks of earthquake that the tremulous motion of their rooms hardly awakes those of them who are asleep, or, if they are roused, they only turn in their beds, just as ordinary mankind would on being disturbed by the crowing of an early cock. From some organic cause, which has not, we believe, yet been formally laid down by scientific inquirers, the firm substance of England's soil has of late been more or less subject to tremors, and earthquake is familiarly taken to account for any convulsion which shakes furniture and windows, and agitates slightly even buildings. To this cause was attributed by many thousand persons the disturbance of the equilibrium of things and the rumbling noise which, on the morning of the 1st of October, pervaded an area of the country so wide that the strongest testimony as to its extent was received with incredulity. As it was lamentably proved, an explosive force had been at work which, not to speak it profanely, has for suddenness scarcely its parallel in nature. Whirlwinds, hurricanes, tornadoes, thunder-storms, earthquakes, volcanoes, the rush of massed waters, mighty as they are for destruction, desolating as they are in their effects, all have about them the principle of progression; their operation, though rapid, seldom if ever fails to give some warning of their approach. If the dwellers in Pompeii had listened with understanding ears to the ominous growlings of Vesuvius, and had marked the portents that hovered in the sultry air and the dark clouds which hung over the devoted city, escape might have been possible to many whose ashes mingle with the scoriæ amidst which the archæologist now gropes for illustrations of the watering-place life of Imperial Rome. But for instantaneousness, for force, for destructive result, for capability of annihilating all possibility of escape, no agency that is familiar to man is so complete as that invention which will hand the name of Friar Bacon down to latest posterity. In a duly adapted vehicle, a thimbleful of gunpowder acting on a small piece of lead is answerable, in the twinkling of an eye, for a man's life; in charges varying from twenty-five to fifty pounds, its propelling power issuing from the mouths of large ordnance takes no denial from the stoutest iron-plates, and splinters granite like glass; a store of it amounting to twenty-five thousand pounds shakes Liverpool to its foundations; and what the effects are of an explosion of over one hundred thousand pounds, let the scene in and around Belvedere tell.

And yet, when considering the degrees of comparison above indicated, one cannot but be struck with the fact that the destructive results are relatively small. So far as ordinary precaution was concerned, and consistently with the circumstance that such a store of dangerously explosive material should be kept within reach of human habitation at all, the event produced by such a mass of gunpowder has been reduced to the minimum. It would seem that the magazines were placed in commendable remoteness from any other than the houses of persons connected with the work, and that a large space of land was kept bare around them, so that the loss of life has been singularly little; and as the first fury and the concentrated violence of the nitrous flame had verge enough to expend itself, the main portion of the damage done was caused by concussion, one of the minor forces of gunpowder. But granting so much as this; allowing that under the contingencies of the case the proprietors of the magazines are open to no censure, and that, being permitted by law and custom to house these inflammable wares at such a place as Belvedere, they have exercised all the care and prudence in their arrangements which were due to the responsibility which they incurred; a question of great public interest arises—and that is, whether it is consistent with the general weal that gunpowder should be massed in such localities as render possible even such a catastrophe as that of last week? Unhappily, this material of war has, since that millennial epoch of 1851, from which was to date universal peace and brotherhood, been in active and constant demand, and at this moment the trade is so brisk that, as we believe, manufacturers are scarcely able to supply the calls made upon them with adequate rapidity. It is hopeless, therefore, to suppose that any perceptible diminution will take place in the making and storing of gunpowder, and the necessity for some attempt to reduce the perils which surround both those conditions of its manufacture and storage. It is a small matter when the second commercial town in the empire is threatened with destruction because a vessel, heavily laden with gunpowder, lies in the vicinity of its docks; and when a district, almost metropolitan, and which includes our only military arsenal, is liable to instantaneous flame and percussion which may be caused by the dropping of a minute ash from an insensate boatman's pipe.

In this garden-cultured land of England every rood of earth is put at almost a fictitious value, and the price of provisions is fast blurring out our wide landscapes of open commons; but we believe that there are still left many uncultivated areas, whither legislative enactment might compel gunpowder manufactories and magazines to be relegated, and where they might explode with comparative impunity. No doubt such spots are mostly far inland and remote from the busy haunts of men, and therefore their occupation for this special manufacture might add to the expense which those whose capital is invested therein would incur. But the case is so purely exceptional, the necessity in reference to the public welfare and the safety of life and property so obvious, that the matter is taken out of the category of ordinary trading, and submission to abnormal rules is only a duty which powder-mill owners are bound to fulfil. If some such regulations as those at which we have hinted should tend to render gunpowder dear, and to check the hopes of those who speculate on the chances of peace in the world there are few things more hopeful in relation to the consummation of their wishes than the tendency in modern times towards expensiveness in all materials of war. Ships of war, weapons of precision, military hygiene, everything appertaining to the fitting out and maintaining of fleets and armies, are brought to such a state of nicety that the expenditure upon them is immense. The Crimean campaign and the war in Italy in 1859 were brought to a close much sooner than would otherwise have been the case because the drain of money was found to be too severe in those warlike operations of months than was the case in years of the international contests of the previous half century. Since the more recent wars, the spirit of military invention and improvement which has involved the change of many things, has increased of expense. A first-rate man-of-war a few years ago cost £100,000, all standing; the hull of an iron-clad frigate now stands accountant for £300,000, and when ready for sea she represents a hill of half a million. A single piece of cannon a few years often for a sum of £2000; and so does the whole manufacture, which we are told is the only one worth using, is valued and paid for at £50. Without speaking of men's lives, which at present are estimated at rather more than a shilling a day, all the surroundings and belongings of war are the dearest things in the market now, and while they have about them a special character of unprofitableness to those who supply the funds for their purchase, and are calculated to produce no return but suffering, and sorrow, and desolation. It is, therefore, no violent supposition, no undue assumption of a predictive power, if it be laid down that we are on the very far distant when mankind will see the wisdom of spending their money otherwise than in materials of war. In the change that will then take place will necessarily be included a diminution of the dangers from the explosion of magazines of gunpowder.

A circular memorandum from the Horse Guards was on Wednesday issued at Woolwich, informing the brigades and divisions in garrison of the Duke of Cambridge's approval of the promptitude and energy displayed by the officers and men in assisting at the scene of the recent disaster at Belvedere. The Commander-in-Chief also expresses his gratification at the successful endeavours of the troops in erecting the temporary pier or foundation with which the country around was so imminently threatened, and which, but for their ready and untiring labours, would have undoubtedly been a prey to it.

The following letter, found among Captain Speke's papers by his brother, has been published in the Times:—"Gondokoro, February 15. I say his brother, "the last words he wrote, and very likely among his last thoughts, as I soon saw that I could be visited with very similar disease. Baker, having a great regard for him"—Sexton Park, Cowham, Sept. 14.—Lear Mr. Baker,—I have received your letter of the 10th, which you have been handling the Nile question in the Times of the 17th. The kind assurance of the sympathy of the home country in the matter is a perfect pleasure, and we have gone, at the true state of the system practised on us, hand in hand. The object of the expedition was to benefit Africa, and have operated in the most direct manner to that end, whether the traders are so susceptible to of acquiring into the nature of the country they have appropriated to themselves. For the long remaining this subject, for no one can do it better than yourself. No doubt would, a Council is much wanted in the Soudan; but then he should not be a trader, for no one can trade honestly in those regions. I have great fears about the fate of Baker. He ordered Pudsickie to place a boat for him at Gondokoro this and last year. The boat was there, and the men with whom Baker went into the interior must have returned to that port else we could not have heard of Baker's having gone to Unyoro. This being necessarily the case, how is it that Baker did not send a line by them to Petherick, unless some foul play can answer the question? For the love of those you have lost, go bring retribution on the miscreants who occasioned it. There is no richer land in the world than the equatorial regions, and nothing more of importance to the interests of Egypt, as well as our own merchants, than that of opening up those lands to legitimate commerce."

M. DROUYN DE LHUYS' DESPATCH ON THE ITALIAN QUESTION.

The following is a summary of the despatch, dated Sept. 12, addressed by M. Drouyn de Lhuys to M. de Sartiges, on the executation of Rome:—

The despatch recalls that the French Government always considered the occupation of Rome as abnormal and temporary. In 1859 the Pope proposed to fix the end of that year for the evacuation of the Papal territory by the French, but events prevented this taking place. In 1860 the French troops were to have returned at the end of August, but the agitation which arose again prevented the evacuation being accomplished. M. Drouyn de Lhuys then explains that reasons which induced the Emperor to determined the Mexicans to abandon the formidable defences of Huejuilla.

M. DROUYN DE LHUYS' DESPATCH ON THE ITALIAN QUESTION.

The following is a summary of the despatch, dated Sept. 12, addressed by M. Drouyn de Lhuys to M. de Sartiges, on the executation of Rome :—

The despatch recalls that the French Government always considered the occupation of Rome as abnormal and temporary. In 1859 the Pope proposed to fix the end of that year for the evacuation of the Papal territory by the French, but events prevented this taking place. In 1860 the French troops were to have returned at the end of August, but the agitation which arose again prevented the evacuation being accomplished. M. Drouyn de Lhuys then explains that reasons which induced the Emperor to determined the Mexicans to abandon the formidable defences of Huejuilla.

The occupation of Rome constitutes an act of intervention contrary to all the fundamental principles of our public laws, and is the more difficult to justify inasmuch as our object in leading Piedmont since 1859 to the very limit of the concessions which the present state of things is to preserve the will of man. Frequent changes have become necessary to reassure the French army, and, nevertheless, the same discussions and the same conflicts of jurisdiction have constantly renewed. Great inconveniences and fresh difficulties have constantly arisen. Two Governments not following the same direction in the same country, and not acting on the same principles, and consequently not always in accordance, is a state which too often the Court of Rome believes to depend on its conduct in whatever manner it may assume to be the result of its own resources. The question is no longer one of knowing whether the possibility of a policy which we cannot approve.

The despatch continues:—"Notwithstanding the manifest inconvenience which we experienced, we resolved not to allow ourselves to be diverted from the brilliant mission which we had undertaken, and we then points out the happy changes which have taken place in the general condition of the peninsula :—

The Italian Government, he says) has succeeded in dissolving for the middle associations directed against Rome. It did not confine itself to opposing the organization of the Italian Legion, and the Italian Emigration Committee, but impressed its policy towards the Holy See with a tendency more in harmony with international principles. It ceased to put forward in the Chamber the absolute programme proclaiming Rome as the capital of Italy, and to address to us no pressing solicitations on the subject of the evacuation of the Papal soil. Renouncing the pursuit by force of the realization of a project we were determined to oppose, it has taken the course of waiting for the action of authority, the presence of which is essential at a more central point, the ultimate of which it has intended transferring the capital to another city. This eventuality is of the highest importance for the Holy See as well as for the Emperor's policy, for it will constitute a new state of things, no longer offering the same dangers.

The despatch says, in conclusion, that France, on seeing the stipulations of the treaty of September fulfilled, has only to look for the evacuation of Rome. The Holy See must also desire to return to the normal state of things, and, consequently, "will be more confident," says the Minister, "that it will do us full justice for the sentiments by which we are guided."

The Paris correspondent of the Times discussed the tendency and bearing of the despatch of M. Drouyn de Lhuys to M. de Sartiges, and are all that unanimous in the opinion that it is a document of the highest value and power of the Pope. The Débats concludes an elaborate review of the despatch by expressing its admission to the opinion of its contemporaries. The Siècle, referring to the despatch, inquires what will happen if the Pope refuses the reconciliation now proposed, and if the Roman people spontaneously manifest themselves in favour of it. It is probable, that journal thinks, that France could impose upon the revolted Romans the obligation of returning to obedience, and of giving her support from it. The convention has been officially transmitted to the Austrian Government.

The Pays publishes an article which states that the French Government determined to enter into negotiations for the evacuation of Rome, on the formal acquiescence of the Italian Government having resolved to adopt Florence as the capital, and that therefore the change of capital must precede, not follow, the recall of the army of occupation.

SPAIN.

Queen Christina, after an absence of many years, arrived at Madrid yesterday week. She was well received by the people, and the Madrid journals speak of her favourable by her return.

The following is the official list of the members of the new Cabinet :—General de la Marmora, President of the Council, Minister for Foreign Affairs, and ad interim Minister of Marine; Signor Lanza, Minister of the Interior; Signor Jacini, Minister of Public Works; Signor Petitti, Minister of War; Signor Sella, Minister of Finance; Signor Tocelli, Minister of Commerce; Signor Natoli, Minister of Public Instruction.

The Official Gazette of Turin publishes the following as the programme of the new Italian Ministry :—

In assuming the government of public affairs under such grave circumstances, the new Ministry feels itself called upon to make known to the nation, in the most clear and explicit manner, its intentions respecting the predominant question which absorbs public attention and agitates public opinion.

The Cabinet accepts the convention recently stipulated with the Imperial Government of France for the evacuation by the French troops of the Pontifical territory, as also the conditions of the treaty of September, and is loyally. With this intention, and confident that object, it will submit a bill to the Chambers to sanction the Parliamentary treaty.

Under the same head, the Cabinet declares the conviction that, motives of high public consideration and of strict equity impose upon the Government of the King the duty of proposing to the Parliament all such measures as may be best suited to alleviate the losses to the city which would cease to be the capital of the kingdom. Meanwhile, will avail itself of such means as, by the convention for the evacuation of the Pontifical territory by the French troops.

This noble city, which, above every other thought, has always cherished that of the future grandeur of Italy, as this will know how, in all events, to offer to Europe the splendid example of that dignified calmness which it has always observed in all phases of Italian insurrection, and which is needful for it the sympathies and the approbation of the whole Italian peninsula and of the entire civilized world.

It is with such resolutions, which it believes are shared by the great majority of the nation, that the Ministry presents itself with present itself to Parliament, with the conviction that the Italian populations, penetrated with the gravity and difficulties of the situation, will avoid in full confidence in the votes of that Parliament, and will know how to maintain that accordance of will, that unbroken faith in the Crown, which have been our principal strength in the glorious events accomplished since 1859 up to this period, and which must still be the surest guarantee of the entire realization of the destinies of the nation.

The explanations of the new Ministry have been well received by the Turin journals, and the quiet and order of the city are completely restored. Baron Ricasoli, before he returned to Florence, met his political friends and advised them to support the Ministry.

A despatch from Rome states that the Pope has ordered public prayers and daily processions, in view of the gravity of the political state of things.

The trial of the Consalvis has passed sentence upon the persons implicated in the conspiracy of the 12th of April last. Palma was condemned to hard labour for life; Fiori to fifteen, Filiberti and Fajoli to ten, and Romano to six, years' hard labour.

An attempt to get up a popular demonstration was made at Rome yesterday week, but no arrests were made; and the French gendarmerie soon stifled the affair.

BAVARIA.

Herr von Schrenck, the President of the Council and Minister for Foreign Affairs, has, at his own request, been relieved of his functions, intending for the present to retire into private life.

Herr von Neumayr has been temporarily appointed Minister for Foreign Affairs, and Herr Pfeufer Minister of Commerce.

DENMARK AND GERMANY.

The boundary question, which has long been between Denmark and the German great Powers remains unsettled. It refers, of course, to the line of demarcation proposed to be drawn between Schleswig and Jutland. The principal point of dispute is the small town of Christianfeld, in Schleswig, which is claimed by Denmark.

At Wurzburg's meeting of the Conference the Danish Plenipotentiaries are said to have made certain concessions in the boundary and financial questions; but they insisted that the Duchies should have no part of the indemnity to pay for the redemption of the Sound dues, and finally made a fresh proposition for the settlement of the question.

A vehement dispute, in which M. Hall, lately the Danish Prime Minister, has taken a leading part, is going on between Denmark and Swedish press on the question whether Sweden did or did not lead Denmark to expect material assistance during the late war and afterwards back out of the obligation.

RUSSIA.

The betrothal of the Crown Prince of Russia with Princess Dagmar has been announced officially at St. Petersburg.

A semi-official reply to the Pope's letter on Poland has been issued. It states that the Emperor has read the letter in the true spirit in which we are afraid they may lose their power by the newly-awakened civilisation of the people. In other respects, it says, Russia is indifferent to the Encyclical letter.

Configurations continue to occur in Russia. The town of Kosiehi, in the government of Kalouga, and the seventeen hamlets around down last week; and at Rennebarg, in the government of Riazan, 150 were reduced to ashes.

AMERICA.

We have details of the retreat fought in the Shenandoah Valley between the Federals under Rosecrans and the Confederates under General Early. The following despatch is from General Sheridan himself, dated the 20th ult., the day after the battle :—

General—We fought the battle from daylight till between six and seven o'clock p.m. We drove him from Opequan Creek, through Winchester, and beyond Kernstown. We captured from him over 3000 prisoners, five pieces of artillery, nine battle-flags, and all the rebel wounded and dead. They wounded in Winchester amount to about 2000. We, too, killed, General David Russell, commanding a division of the 6th Army Corps, and in wounded, Generals Upton, Grover, Wheaton, and Upton. We also killed and wounded following general officers—General Rhodes, General Wharton, General Gordon, and General Ramseur. We have been three days fighting through Winchester, and we are after them to-morrow. This army behaved splendidly.

(Signed) P. H. SHERIDAN, Major-General Commanding.

P.S. I am reading forward all the medical supplies, subsistence stores, and ammunition.

A correspondent of a New York journal gives the following outline of this important battle-field :—

The Federal General formed his infantry forces in four lines of battle, about 200 yards apart, and, everything being in readiness, the advance was sounded about seven o'clock. The troops advanced in splendid style, and took the enemy's position at the point of the bayonet, driving the rebels back in confusion. The enemy made a stand at the next line, which was also taken, and the rebels were driven back in confusion through Winchester. The artillery was now brought up and posted in commanding positions in the town, and the infantry pursued the flying foe, capturing many prisoners, and one line was re-formed and again moved forward, to assault the enemy's reserves, and our line was re-formed and again moved forward, to assault the enemy's reserves, and our line was re-formed and again moved forward, to assault the enemy's reserves, and our

The President has appointed General Sheridan a Brigadier-General in the regular army, and assigned him to the prominent command of the Middle Military Division.

General Grant ordered the army under his command to fire a salute of 100 guns in honour of Sheridan's victory.

A correspondent from General Sherman's army says that the Whitworth rifle in use by the Southern skirmishers and sharpshooters is a weapon greatly to be feared, as persons nearly a mile and a half from the Confederate skirmish line have been wounded when they thought themselves safe from anything except solid shot and shell. One solicier was standing upon a log crossing a creek, about one mile and a quarter from the nearest Confederate line of rifle-pits, and a comrade was talking with him, when one of these fatal messengers came crashing through both thighs, and with this mortal wound he sank into the water. An officer, speaking of it, says—"They break the back of a man's limb like a solid shot carries a cannon." Another says that each division of the Confederate front is furnished with about fifty of these rifles, which are used in their skirmish line.

The British recollection seems to be short. Mr. Cook, of Calcutta, and threeghest the North, have been great successes. Great enthusiasm was manifested.

THE BRAZILS.

A despatch from Rio de Janeiro announces that a new Ministry has been formed composed as follows:—President of the Council and Minister of Justice, Senhor Furtado; Interior, Liberato; Finance and ad interim Foreign Affairs, Carlos Carneiro De Campos; War, Francepeire Rohan; Marine, Pitto Lana; Agriculture, Jannino Marcondes.

CHINA.

The Gazette of yesterday week contains a despatch from Mr. Adkins Acting British Consul at Chinkiang, in which he gives a clear and succ ict statement of the effect of the fall of Nankin. He says:—

I owe the honour to inform you that the city of Nankin, so long the centre of civil disturbance in China, and the capital of the rebels, is now in the hands of the imperialists. The rebels were defeated on their raids upon the peaceful and wealthy cities of Ch'ai and Chiuna, but been captured by the imperialist army under the command of Tseng-k'wo-Chuen.

When the Imperialists made good their entrance into the city they found that the palace of the Tied-Wang, the leader of the rebellion and the claimant for many years past of Divine honours and attributes, had been burnt to the ground. It is said that the imposter and his immediate attendants be buried in its ruins. I am inclined to credit the statement, for the city gates were blocked dest since January last, and I think that nothing but a desperate sortie would have enabled him to get clear.

But the most important is the capture of the Chung-Wang. This person has for many years been the most powerful and influential of all the imperialist Tsungpiu-dao last week. If it was who threatened Shanghai in 1860; he was the Imperial Peace's antagonist in the Taeping rebellion, and has fought against Colonel Gordon at Soochow. He tried to introduce the foreign element into the rebellion, and was the rebel sympathiser in whom the last hope of the Taeping cause in its declining days. After the assault he managed to leave the city with a few followers, and was captured three days subsequently by a party of rebels. I was much pressed to visit the Chung-Wang in his confinement, but could not. I had no personal acquaintance with him.

Mr. Adkins rode into and through the captured city. He says:—

Words cannot describe the utter desolation of everything within the walls. The main thoroughfares traversed on the road from the Taiping Gate to the west and east gates, and those between the south-west and south gates. On either hand the house left standing had been gutted and burnt, and the long tenantless for years, while the gaudy gateways, denoting the residence of the wangs or princes, exposed in many instances on account of the fall of the ornamental timbers. As for the side streets, they were many of them overgrown with rank and tall high.

During my ride through the city I saw a great number of unburied bodies, and in many places the smell was overpowering. Outside the Taiping Gate, near Lee, who accompanied me, were almost overpowered. But, on the whole, I came to the conclusion that the city was not so large as the rebels had stated, and could not have been very large. The Imperialists, according to their own account, report very few deaths among them, so that the slaughter in the streets would be a fair criterion of the strength of the garrison. I estimate it at 10,000 men, against 50,000 stated by the Imperialists.

I think a ride through the streets of Nankin, as they are at present, would satisfy the most ardent advocate of the rebel cause of the hollowness of the pears of the system they support. Some eleven years ago the Taepings took Nankin, the seat of the first rebellion. Ever since the Imperialists have been their head-quarters. In it the chiefs of the movement built their tawdry houses, and in it they displayed their wandering mania in the most extravagant manner. Meanwhile, the works of civil government and social organisation are entirely neglected, and when the city is retaken it is found to be a wilderness of empty houses.

JAPAN.

Advices received at Paris by the French mail state that two English vessels had been fired into by a battery belonging to Prince Chosion.

A despatch from Vienna asserts that the negotiations in Prague between Austria and Prussia relative to the Zollverein have not been broken off, but only postponed.

The Independance Belge describes at much length the warm reception given to some British rifle volunteers who were present at the Brussels fêtes by the gymnasium-clubmen of Brussels, and received by them at Ixelles, Ixrues, Ghent, Liege, Louvain, and Tournai.

Mr. J. J. Serran writes to the Times stating that he witnessed last week a disgraceful scene in the cathedral at Boulogne. The cathedral was full of worshippers, when their supplications were suddenly broken by a peregrine sacred place by walking about the church with their hats on and with pipes in their mouths. The Imperial Commissioner was present within the precincts of the Lady Chapel, where people were engaged in prayer.

LEPROSY IN INDIA.—The Royal College of Surgeons having requested a series of interrogatories with a view to legislation during the coming leprosy, copies were sent to this country and forwarded to medical officers in all directions, with the request that they would refer to the most explicit replies to the queries propounded. Those attached to stations in the Upper Provinces have complied with the request, and their answers have been published by the Government. Although trenting of a disorder which all mankind is interested to be acquainted with leading, the answers are full of interest. They make us acquainted with many singular facts of which we were before ignorant, and they afford a view of the disease as they place before us, as in a mirror, the physical, social, and moral problem of the unhappy sufferers. With the answers to the first set of queries we could receive more or less familiar. Our streets and lanes are familiar to us with forms of disease, and the causes of these diseases make us tremble for sons and fathers. The disease generally manifests itself in the seventh year of life, and appears to be hereditary in about one-third. It is, however, very rarely communicated by such means; but it commonly induces a predisposition to other diseases, as fever, small-pox, fever, &c., from which the patient rarely recovers. Leprosy in its early stages commonly attacks the male sex; but as females can and do conceal the disease, and as females are more concerned in preserving the public health, cannot be say but the poorer classes, the assertion must be accepted with an allowance. Leprosy does appear to be infectious, and has been communicated by contagion and heredity or not. It affects Hindoos and Mohammedans almost equally, and nomore both among high-caste and low-caste people. It appears to affect Europeans not everything. The disorder is by some attributed to the miserable way in which natives live, in foul, unventilated, overcrowded, and ill-supplied houses and heaps of all kinds of filth, wearing clothes which they never put off except to wash, and never sufficient; laughing water which is used by laborers of three unhappy sufferers remain free; wealthy lepers entertain men of the same purpose, who wash and dress in public, and the latter of two women are in constant attendance on them, and are yet unknown by the disorder. Dr. Cortez, of Bareilly, mentions an instance in which a man was in a boat being employed as a cook in a public serai, and she assured him that no objection that were made by travellers to her food on account of it. Dr. Parke believes that the discharge from the ulcerative stage, if applied to an abraded surface, would inoculate the individual with whom it came in contact. Dr. Lord, of Mirzapore, and Dr. Annesley, of Jhansie, report two cases of spontaneous cure, the former of father and son, the latter of two women. In the former case the boy was wholly cured, the father partially. But, generally speaking, medicine can only check progress, not restore the patient to perfect health. We hope the intention expressed by Mr. Parke at the end of his letter will be carried out, and that he will find he will microscopically examine the different forms of the disease, and the blood secretions, and subject the bodies of deficient lepers to a close examination. Results may be obtained of the most important character, such as shall enable medical officers to extend successfully with the most loathsome and repulsive disease by which human nature is afflicted.—Bengal Hurkaru.

LATEST NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The following telegram has been received through Mr. Reuter's office:—

AMERICA.

Arrival of the Pennsylvania (via Crookhaven).

NEW YORK, Sept. 29 (Evening).—After the battle near Winchester, Sheridan pursued Early beyond Strasburg, and again attacked him at Fisher's Hill. Sheridan's report states that the right of the Confederate army rested on the north fork of the Shenandoah, extending across Strasburg Valley westward to the North Mountain, and occupying a plateau of the mountain. Sheridan's plan of attack was simple. Crook's command was transferred to the extreme right of the line of the North Mountain and attacked the enemy's left, carrying everything before him. Whilst Crook drove away the enemy and swept down behind their breastworks, the 6th and 19th Corps attacked the rebel works in front, and the whole army appeared to be broken up. Sheridan fled in the utmost confusion, and sixteen guns were captured. The darkness and the nature of the ground alone prevented a rout. Thursday night Sheridan pushed on down the Shenandoah Valley. Two divisions of cavalry were left in Strasburg Valley. During the 21st their push on to the main valley the result of the engagement will be more signal.

Correspondents' letters assert that Early's loss in prisoners in the first day's fight will approximate to 5000. Among the killed and wounded are Generals Ramseur, Pegram, Rhodes, Goodwin, Godwin, Terry, Goodwin, Bradley, Johnson, and Fitzhugh Lee. The Federal loss in the same battle is estimated at between 3000 and 4000 men.

EFFECTS AND APPLICATIONS OF PHYSIOLOGICAL

ORIGIN are the subject of a memoir, by M. Faye, read recently before the Academy of Sciences. M. Faye has long entertained the opinion that sun-spot denist stains by practice to a wonderful degree of precision; yet the eye, observing a spot, is in a position to judge of the size of the spot relatively which vibrates 500 times a second, will sometimes fail; and small errors in time lead to much greater ones in position. M. F. W. Bessel has shown that variations due to the disturbances incident to the processes of digestion and circulation, and that the personal equation, as it is called, between two observers, or at least to bring to their aid, the two great discoveries of our epoch—photography and the electric telegraph. The first has been employed in consequence of MM. Fizeau and Foucault, which might be applied to the determination of the personal equation, by means of the difference of longitude between the observatories of Geneva and Neufchâtel. The electric telegraph, which has been employed in this determination, as Paris, some years ago, in experiments made under M. Faye's own direction. The process, which is the most accurate, and which has become more delicate, but not impracticable, when applied to the stars. It consists in substituting for the eye of the observer a chronographic apparatus, and registering electrically the moment at which light is admitted into the dark chamber and falls upon a photographic plate. The plate is made to revolve once of the sun in 20 seconds. Further details will be found in No. 11 of vol. lix. of the Comptes Rendus, which contains M. Faye's memoir. Another memoir by him describes on the velocity of the propagation of sound through gases, he devoted himself for a long time. The method is based on the employment of instantaneous transmission, due not only to personal organic sensations, but to the time necessarily occupied by the sound in traversing the space between observer of the screens of error, they may devise means to elude them.

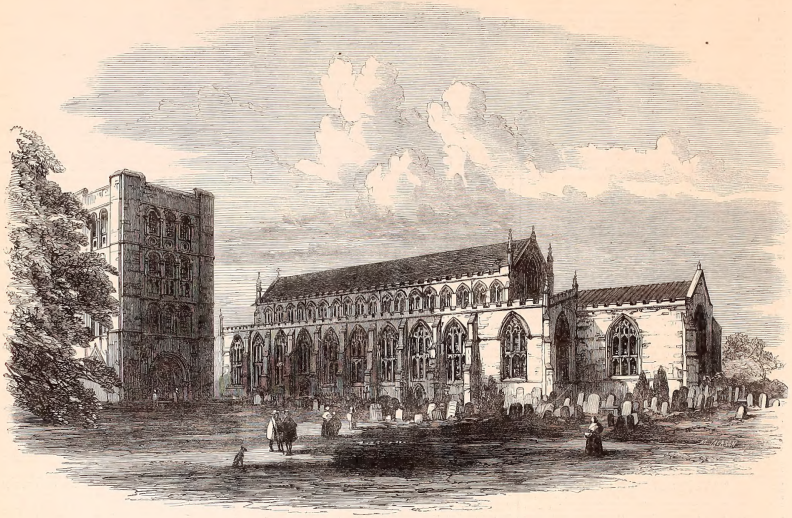
FLOWER-FARMING.—The cultivation of flowers is one of more primitive than forming operations. Roses, for example. The field is rent monthly rose-leaves, which are sold to the perfumer, and the whole cultivation of various plants; it is then ploughed with oxen at the cycle. No season is entirely free from work, but there is a time of rest and of replenish, and Nature does the rest. In the second year a considerable quantity of rose-leaves are gathered, but it is not until the third year that are fully developed. A plantation of roses well tended will last from six to eight years. The Rose de Mai, or Provence rose, is the best. It requires 10,000 rose-plants to cover an acre, and this acre will produce 1000 lb. of rose-leaves, or 1 lb. of essential oil, worth about £100. For cassias the land is prepared in a similar way. The young plants are raised from seed, and are set out in rows. Every second row of the plants are cut down. In the third year they have generally a height of two or three feet, and are then cut down to within a few inches of the ground to collect spare. The blossoms of the cassia are successive, some being ready for picking while others are in bud. Jessamine, which is largely cultivated by the farmer, one lot of blossoms being gathered and passed through the perfumer's hands before the next appears. The Grasse, or Cannes, is the true produces flowers, growing at the same time till they attain maturity, when they come to perfection. The Grasse is a warm spot, and the first frost and a stem as thick as a man's wrist. Each full-grown tree will produce about 100 kilogrammes, or 200 lb. weight of fruit. An olive-grove is somewhat resembling that of green tea. The reader who has sauntered along the Canebière of Marseilles, who remembers the ragged urchins, who (like their kind all over Europe) no sooner spy the "Monsu" than they are seized with an impassioned desire to make him a present of a bouquet of flowers, in France and Italy; of weeds, in Switzerland); this bouquet, in Marseilles, is usually composed of the yellow cassia buds, which are to be had nearly all the year round. The jasmine is cultivated by slips of the wild jasmine (that which is seen in our English gardens), grafted at the end of two years with the Spanish jasmine (Jasminum grandiflorum). This produces a blossom for sale at a reading, of intense fragrance. It requires about eighty thousand plants to stock an acre; and they are set in full bearing till the second year after grafting; but, when in bearing, these jasmine plants yield about sixty pounds' weight of flowers annually.—Cornhill Magazine.

CHURCH AND UNIVERSITIES.

The Archbishop of York purposes holding a general ordination on Sunday, Dec. 18.

The church of the Inner Temple was reopened, after the restoration, on Sunday last.

The Rev. Arthur O. Hardy, Assistant Master of Wellington College, has been appointed by the Lord Bishop of Calcutta to succeed Mr. Cowie as his Lordship's domestic Chaplain.

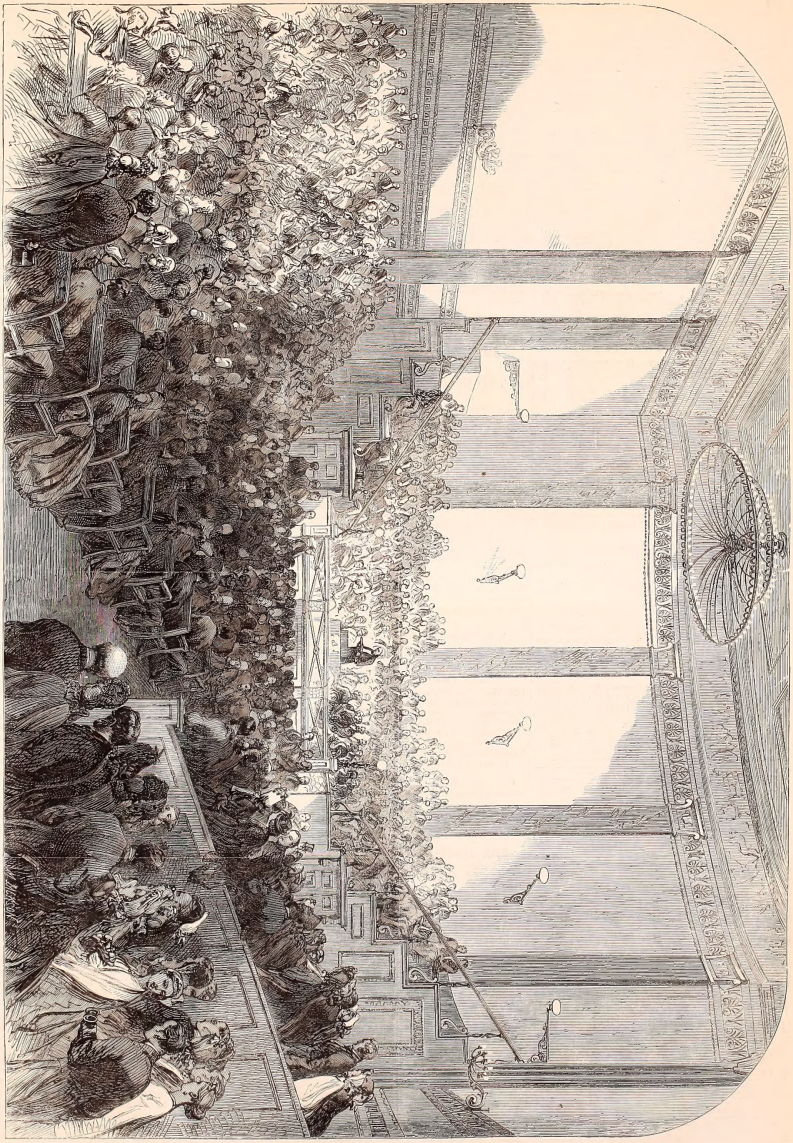


On Thursday week the parish church of Sherbourne, near Warwick, which has been the scene of great magnificence, at the expense of Miss Byland, of Barford Hall, was consecrated by the Lord Bishop of the diocese.

The foundation-stone of a church for New Brompton was laid on Tuesday by Viscount Sydney, in the presence of a large number of spectators. The church, which is to be dedicated to St. Mark, will accommodate about 800 persons. Its total cost of building will be £5701, and the amount at present raised is £2000.

The first choral festival of the choirs in union with the Diocesan Church Choir Association of Devon and Exeter, was held in the parish church of St. Andrew, Cullompton, on Wednesday week. The church is a very fine one, with one of the finest roof-screens in the county. The choirs numbered nearly 200 voices, from fifteen parishes. On Tuesday week one of the first choral festivals which has taken place in East was held in Erdington Church, in which the members of various choirs, numbering altogether 140 voices, took part.—The choral festival, for the benefit of aged musicians, was held in Lincoln Cathedral on Wednesday week.

The Countess of Ellesmere, on Thursday week, laid the foundation-stone of a new church in the parish of Bromley St. Leonard, near Bow. The new church, which will be dedicated to St. Michael and All Angels, is designed for a district in the immediate neighbourhood of the East India Dock and the Commercial-road, containing 16,000 persons, chiefly mechanics and labourers employed in the yards, factories, and docks. The district has been constituted out of the old parish of Bromley, the population of which has increased from 11,000 in 1851 to 28,000 in 1864. The church is to contain 1000 sittings, of which one-half are to be unappropriated seats. It will cost £7500, towards which £4500 has been subscribed; and the ground, valued at £1200, has been presented by Mr. David Macintosh, of Harrington-street, near Romford.



The Bishop of Norwich, as chairman of a meeting at Norwich, distributed prizes given by the scholars of Jodocus Church-of-England School on Saturday last. There were 191 candidates, sixty-six of whom were distinguished above the rest. The examination was defective. The bishop regarded as a serious matter. On the previous Wednesday he presided at the anniversary meeting of the Bible Society, and found that the people knew about the Bible. Wherever, he said, we find a person who thinks or reads, we find a Bible. It is the book of books, and in place such as it never occurred before. There were thousands and millions hearing about the Bible, and reading books which spoke about it; and therefore it was of the greatest importance that the present day that they should have the Bible itself, whether directly for the Bible or for the truth as a testimony against (against error). to which to go and to which to turn; they would see the way in which the Bible and the doctrines of error so rife in our day. At the present time there were, no doubt, errors springing up concerning the Bible which were not known in former days, and he thought they were, in fact, be reduced to one. There were some who, when they took up God's Holy Word, regarded it as not to be received as God's testimony. There were others who took up the book with a desire to learn from it true morality, and there were, he feared, many who, under man's moral nature and the rule for his moral being; and they treated the book as if it were to be submitted to their own conscience, instead of their conscience being submitted to the inspired Word of God, but they thought it was to be submitted to the teaching of the Bible. There were many unsanctified differences of mind, and they led to very serious conclusions and very different treatment of God's Holy Word; but there were many opinions

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1864.

We entirely approve of the remonstrances that have lately been offered by a portion of the London press against the tone which has been much too generally adopted by public speakers and writers in discussing the events of the American war, and we desire to lose no opportunity of protesting against any kind of "utterance," literary or vocal, that may tend to embitter the relations between ourselves and our Transatlantic brethren. Without the slightest assumption of credit to this Journal for having done anything beyond its duty in abstaining from cynical or hostile comment upon the frightful struggle in the West, we may fairly say that we have not only not done so, but have permitted ourselves to be irritated into printing sought that, on its re-perusal when the contest shall be over, can properly give offence to American readers. We could heartily wish that partisans on both sides would remember that the exasperating interference of bystanders in a quarrel is much more slowly forgiven by combatants than the wrongs which each supposes himself to have sustained from his enemy.

It would be absurd to deny that the supposed weakness of the Confederacy, and the gallant fight which they have made against a force which England no less than the North originally believed would be irresistible, have enlisted on the side of the South a very large share of British sympathy. Nearly all the leading newspapers of this country have seemed delighted to chronicle the successes of the Confederates, to make the most of the deeds of their Generals, and to speak slightingly of the efforts of the Unionists. Journals which at the outset of the war described the resistance of the South as hopeless, and were almost as ready as Mr. Seward himself to fix dates for the utter subjugation of the "rebels," have long abandoned that view of the disruption, and now chronicle the story of the combat with warm admiration and treat each campaign as a new step towards Southern independence. For all this we submit that the Federals, whatever may be the issue of the war, will not be entitled to complain of us. They have certainly been at least as much astonished as ourselves. When the Sumter guns fired, it was almost impossible to believe that the mighty nation then defied would not make short work with the separatists, and the vindication of English journalism is to be found in the printed despatches of American statesmen. It is clear that both London and Washington were deceived as to the power and resolution of the South; and it is not too much to say that could a three years' war have been foreseen it would have been ordered even by the North in a different spirit from that which marked the earlier portions of the struggle. If the Federals knew so little of the will and of the resources of provinces with which they were in daily and hourly communication, it was scarcely to be expected that we, at a fortnight's distance from New York, should be better informed. We all believed that the North, with its enormous population, its command of the sea, and its governmental prestige, would coerce the South into speedy submission. We were wrong, but we think the Federals beaten in the field, and, for a long time at least, impotent at sea; while the Confederates grew stronger and stronger, and addressed themselves to their work with what Northern writers call deep-seated zeal, which calmer judges regard as the earnestness necessary to military success. The South held its own, and holds it still; and the very fact that it does so in the face of all the power and bravery of a gigantic enemy is an irresistible proof that, apart from the merits of the contest, it must have been nobly conducted by the weaker party. Hereafter, the Federals will, we imagine, be ashamed of the outrages in which they have permitted their organs to revile the Southern combatants, who have shown themselves so worthy of the name of Americans.

Let it be admitted, therefore, that the English had a right to be surprised at the success of the war. Let it be said, too, that it is an English habit, in which we occasionally indulge to excess, to give our sympathy to the weaker side in any quarrel. A small nation gallantly struggling against a great one is almost certain to find favour in England, almost without reference to the original quarrel. And there is no denying that the South, which at the first was not thought to have a chance, has acquired itself nobly in this unhappy fray. If we have given too strong expression to our admiration of the pluck of the Confederates, we have erred; but the sentiment in which the North would, in the presence of other circumstances, find much fault, is a too English a sentiment not to be American. But beyond this point we have nothing to say in favour of any Englishman who has insulted the Federal combatants. They must have fought well, or the South would not to have fought as they did. In fact, it would be worse than childish to allege that the great body of the English people did injustice to the efforts of the Federals, although the character of the war necessarily attracted attention to the resisting rather than to the assailing champions. If foolish words have been used and the excitement of so strange and ghastly a spectacle, they were assuredly not the expression of the feelings of the people of England.

It is not unfair, nor is it unkind, however, at this stage of the war, to say that we in England had considerable provocation to speak somewhat frankly on American affairs. For ten years, at least, before the war the leading Americans of all parties were full of abuse of this country. We are now told, and we believe with considerable truth, that the greater portion of this abuse proceeded from writers in the pay of the slaveowners, who could never forgive England for having turned the tide of the world's opinion against slavery, and for having made it certain that the destruction of the domestic institution must come, sooner or later. But it was scarcely for England to know that the minority ruled in the United States, and that the clerkiest and most respectable of American opinions were expressing only the feelings of the dealers in a certain commodity called human flesh. We are only too happy to learn that such is the truth; but we could not know it by instinct. Then the war came, and the Federals, not very reasonably, became angry with us for not instantly adopting the whole case and joining them enthusiastically against their enemies. The storm of abuse continued; but it thundered, and rained, and hailed from a new quarter of the heavens. The New York people all but hanged the principal viceconsul in the country; but as his functionalities preferred conversion to execution, they were thenceforth permitted to rail against us from another platform, and England was denounced as a hypocrite because she was not, heart and soul, for an anti-slavery war. But, unluckily for our assailants' logic, the war was declared by their own Government not to be an anti-slavery war, and, on the contrary, Mr. Lincoln repeatedly offered to put the domestic institution on a firmer footing than ever for those who would abandon the idea of independence. Consequently, what could England, herself anti-slavery to the backbone, do but remain neutral, and leave the combatants to settle what it was that they were fighting for. Now, in the fourth year of the war, the question is yet unsettled, for a large part of the sovereigns of America are for the Union at any price, while another large portion will have no Union without the extinction of slavery. And, up to the very last mails, England is still abused and menaced for a neutrality which has been sternly preserved under the most difficult circumstances which ever complicated the relations of those who ought to be the truest friends.

But, all this said, simply as a record of fact, scarcely as an extenuation of any acerbity on the part of the English press, we revert to our original protest against any bitter words touching the American struggle. Let us try to be as impartial in language as we have been in act; let us do all we can towards humanising a fratricidal war, and let us write nothing in the hour of strife which we shall regret to read in the hour of peace. Soon may it strike!

Mr. Benett said it had not been accepted, and a correspondence ensued. Eventually, Mr. Marshall printed a statement of the affair, and threatened to circulate it wherever Mr. Benett had any connexion unless the £350 awarded was not paid. ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE VISIT OF THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES TO DENMARK, BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

We publish three more Engravings from the sketches of our Special Artist who attends the progress of the Prince and Princess of Wales in their visit to Denmark and Sweden.

One Illustration represents their arrival at Rosenborg Castle, on Monday, the 19th ult. This edifice, built by King Christian IV., is approached through a park or public garden, and over a foot-bridge crossing a moat that at one time surrounded the castle and formed an important element in its defence. The building is in the style of Italian Renaissance, grafted on the ancient Gothic of Northern Europe. Inigo Jones, at that period chief architect to the King, is said to have furnished the plan for Rosenborg. The interior is in exquisite order, and, but that the notions of the present day on the score of comfort would conflict with the size and distribution of many of the apartments, it might again become a Royal residence. In the entrance-hall there are some tables curiously inlaid with maps showing the extent, at the date to which they belong, of the Danish dominions, and likewise the knowledge of geography which the seamen of that period had acquired. A long corridor with a richly wrought ceiling gives admission to the first suite of apartments. It is enriched with a valuable collection of portraits, and contains many objects of antiquarian or artistic interest. The history of the Danish wars with Sweden is displayed upon the walls in admirable tapestries, and the ceiling of the Riddersaal, or Hall of the Knights, is embellished with sculpture in relief. The floor of this apartment is of wood, painted to represent marble. The coronation chairs are placed at the upper end of the Riddersaal, and in front are the colossal silver lions allegorically representing the Great Belt, the Little Belt, and the Sound. In all state ceremonies these play a leading part, and, with the regalia, are appropriately lodged in the same house which holds the coats, arms, jewels, paintings, and relics of the Danish Kings for two centuries. The collection of Venetian glass in a small room off the Riddersaal was a present made to one of these Sovereigns. It is very extensive and of rare value.

From Rosenborg Castle the Royal family, with the Prince and Princess of Wales, their suite and attendants, drove to the residence of the Hereditary Princess of Denmark, widow of the late Prince Frederick, with whom they stayed to lunch. They afterwards proceeded to inspect the Museum of Northern Antiquities, another of the remarkable collections of Copenhagen.

For the subject of another of our Illustrations we have chosen the inspection by their Royal Highnesses, on Wednesday, the 21st ult., of the works of the great Danish sculptor, Thorwaldsen, collected in the Museum at Copenhagen, which was specially built for that purpose, and which also contains his tomb. This singular building was commenced in the lifetime of the artist, who was well aware of its double destination, and himself superintended the construction of the vault which was eventually to inclose his remains, beneath a granite-edged slab in the centre of the courtyard. The architectural details are largely borrowed from the styles of Greek and Etruscan sepulchres, and the mural ornaments of the interior are copied from the decorations of ancient tombs. On the summit of the building is a fine bronze casting of Victory in a car, checking her steeds in the moment of triumph. The figure of the goddess and that of one of the horses in this group are reproduced from Thorwaldsen's own designs; the car and the other three horses were modelled by Bissen. A curious effect is produced by the external wall-paintings, in coloured stucco, intended to set forth the arrival of the sculptor, when, in 1838, after an absence of eighteen years, he returned to Copenhagen in a vessel carrying the greater portion of the works destined for the Museum. Of the contents of the building it will be sufficient to say that they are divided into two parts; the first consisting of pieces of sculpture actually chiselled by Thorwaldsen, or copies in marble or plaster of his works; the second being the collection of objects of ancient and modern art which he amassed during his lifetime. Some idea of the extent of the Museum may be gained from the fact that, irrespective of the plaster casts, it includes no less than four groups, seventeen statues, eighteen busts, sixty-one bas-reliefs, and a frieze, in marble. The total number of Thorwaldsen's works collected here is about 650. All the sketches and models which he used have been preserved, so that it is possible, in the case of each of his principal works, to follow the gradual development of the idea from the first bold outline to the last delicate touch of the graver. The Prince and Princess of Wales, with the Queen of Denmark and Prince John, stayed about two hours in the Museum, passing from one to another of the small rooms, about twenty altogether, each of which contains one important statue or group, with bas-reliefs and other minor works around the walls. About half-past four o'clock a great crowd assembled outside the front entrance of the Museum, along which extends a great hall, in which are placed most of the statues or casts of colossal size. This hall opens on the outside street by glazed windows, not high from the ground, and here were many of the curious citizens peering through the glass to catch sight of the Royal party. When the Prince and Princess left the Museum they were greeted with cordial acclamations.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS AT THORWALDSEN'S MUSEUM, COPENHAGEN.

Our large Engraving gives a view of the Kongen's Nytorv, or "King's New Market," the great central square of Copenhagen, with the Prince of Wales's carriage driving through it, amidst the usual demonstrations of popular goodwill. This large open space, though adorned with an equestrian statue, in bronze or some other metal, of one of the Danish kings, has no very splendid appearance. It forms, however, the principal thoroughfare between the different quarters of the city, as most of the leading streets meet at this point. There is another "Nytorv," or New Market Place, near the royal gardens, which must not be confounded with the Kongen's Nytorf. The Royal palaces are situated on the Frederiks Plads.

ST. JAMES'S CHURCH, BURY ST. EDMUNDS.

We have engraved, from a photograph by Messrs. Cantell and Downes, a view of the exterior of this noble old church, which was reopened by the Bishop of Ely in August, after undergoing extensive repairs and restorations during the last three years. The original church on this site, which was probably dedicated to St. James the Apostle and St. John the Evangelist, emblems of those two saints being sculptured over the western doorway, is supposed to have been erected either by Abbot Anselm, in 1125, or by Abbot Samson—known to the readers of Carlyle's "Past and Present"—about the beginning of the thirteenth century. There is a legend that Abbot Anselm wanted to get rid of the disorderly congregation of the townspeople in the Abbey Church, the ruins of which may now be seen close by, and that he built this church of St. James and St. John for the public accommodation, in order that the monks should have the undisturbed use of their own. But there is another story—that when Abbot Samson, who lived seventy or eighty years later, proposed to go a pilgrimage to the famous shrine of St. James, at Compostella in Spain, his brethren of the monastery, who were loth to part with their Superior, persuaded him to build a new church instead. The small town of Bury St. Edmunds, at any rate, may boast the possession of two of the finest churches in the kingdom, those of St. Mary and St. James. The dimensions of St. James's Church are 193 ft. in length, with the chancel, which is 59 ft. long and 40 ft. 6 in. in breadth. St. Mary's Church, which, including the chancel and sacrarium, is 210 ft. in length and 64 ft. in width, was restored in 1844, under the direction of the late Mr. Cottingham, at a cost of £3000; but the public taste was not then sufficiently enlightened to admit of the removal of the galleries and pews. The restorations of St. James's Church have been sculptor, Thorwaldsen, collected in the Museum at Copenhagen, which was specially built for that purpose, and which also contains his tomb. This singular building was commenced in the lifetime of the artist, who was well aware of its double destination, and himself superintended the construction of the vault which was eventually to inclose his remains, beneath a granite-edged slab in the centre of the courtyard. The architectural details are largely borrowed from the styles of Greek and Etruscan sepulchres, and the mural ornaments of the interior are copied from the decorations of ancient tombs. On the summit of the building is a fine bronze casting of Victory in a car, checking her steeds in the moment of triumph. The figure of the goddess and that of one of the horses in this group are reproduced from Thorwaldsen's own designs; the car and the other three horses were modelled by Bissen. A curious effect is produced by the external wall-paintings, in coloured stucco, intended to set forth the arrival of the sculptor, when, in 1838, after an absence of eighteen years, he returned to Copenhagen in a vessel carrying the greater portion of the works destined for the Museum. Of the contents of the building it will be sufficient to say that they are divided into two parts; the first consisting of pieces of sculpture actually chiselled by Thorwaldsen, or copies in marble or plaster of his works; the second being the collection of objects of ancient and modern art which he amassed during his lifetime. Some idea of the extent of the Museum may be gained from the fact that, irrespective of the plaster casts, it includes no less than four groups, seventeen statues, eighteen busts, sixty-one bas-reliefs, and a frieze, in marble. The total number of Thorwaldsen's works collected here is about 600. All the sketches and moulds which he used have been preserved, so that it is possible, in the case of each of his principal works, to follow the gradual development of the idea from the first bold outline to the last delicate touch of the graver. The Prince and Princess of Wales, with the Queen of Denmark and Prince John, stayed about two hours in the Museum, passing from one to another of the small rooms, about twenty altogether, each of which contains one important statue or group, with bas-reliefs and other minor works around the walls. About half-past four o'clock a great crowd assembled outside the front entrance of the Museum, along which extends a great hall, in which are placed most of the statues or casts of colossal size. This hall opens on the outside street by glazed windows, not high from the ground, and here were many of the curious citizens peering through the glass to catch sight of the Royal party. When the Prince and Princess left the Museum they were greeted with cordial acclamations.

Our large Engraving gives a view of the Kongen's Nytorf, or "King's New Market," the great central square of Copenhagen, with the Prince of Wales's carriage driving through it, amidst the usual demonstrations of popular goodwill. This large open space, though adorned with an equestrian statue, in bronze or some other metal, of one of the Danish kings, has no very splendid appearance. It forms, however, the principal thoroughfare between the different quarters of the city, as most of the leading streets meet at this point. There is another "Nytorf," or New Market Place, near the west gate, which must not be confounded with the Kongen's Nytorf. The Royal palaces are situated on the Frederiks Plads.

ST. JAMES'S CHURCH, BURY ST. EDMUNDS.

We have engraved, from a photograph by Messrs. Marshall and Dowman, a view of the exterior of this noble old church, which was reopened by the Bishop of Ely in August, after undergoing extensive repairs and restorations during the last three years. The original church on this site, which was probably dedicated to St. James the Apostle and St. John the Evangelist, emblems of those two saints being sculptured over the western doorway, is supposed to have been erected either by Abbot Anselm, in 1123, or by Abbot Samson—known to the readers of Carlyle's "Past and Present"—about the beginning of the thirteenth century. There is a legend that Abbot Anselm wanted to get rid of the disorderly congregation of the townspeople in the Abbey Church, the ruins of which may now be seen close by, and that he built this church of St. James and St. John for the public accommodation, in order that the monks should have the undisturbed use of their own. But there is another story—that when Abbot Samson, who lived seventy or eighty years later, proposed to go a pilgrimage to the famous shrine of St. James, at Compostella in Spain, his brethren of the monastery, who were loth to part with their Superior, persuaded him to build a new church instead. The small town of Bury St. Edmunds, at any rate, may boast the possession of two of the finest churches in the kingdom, those of St. Mary and St. James. The dimensions of St. James's Church are 193 ft. in length, with the chancel, which is 55 ft. long and 69 ft. 6 in. in breadth. St. Mary's Church, which, including the chancel and excrescences, is 213 ft. in length and 68 ft. in width, was restored in 1844, under the direction of the late Mr. Cottingham, at a cost of £5000; but the public taste was not then sufficiently enlightened to admit of the removal of the galleries and pews. The restorations of St. James's Church have been more consistent. It was at first designed only to replace the unsightly and ruinous flat ceiling of the nave with a high-pitched roof. Mr. Gilbert Scott was consulted, and a committee having been formed, with the Hon. and Rev. Edward Pellew, the Incumbent, for its chairman, seconded by the churchwardens and other leading parishioners, funds were subscribed, and the plan of operations became more extended. It was decided to remove the galleries, which destroyed the beauty of the church at the west end and on the north side, the south side being free from incumbrance of that kind. The principal feature, however, of the restorations is the new and very beautiful oaken roof, which consists of nineteen pairs of principals (corresponding in number with the pillars on each side of the nave), hammer-beams, wallpieces, moulded collars purlins, ribs, and ridge-braces. The cornice, which is elaborate and beautiful, consists of six enrichments—viz., 1st, a plain moulded wallpiece; 2nd, three designs of ribbon and ragged-staff moulding; 3rd, embattled moulding; 4th, strawberry-leaf ditto; 5th, pierced trefoliated moulding; and, 6th, another embattled moulding. The strawberry-leaf moulding is continued round the hammer-beams, and every alternate one has a carved angel, supporting an emblematic shield, bearing the devices of St. James and St. John, such as the pilgrim's staff and wallet and the cockle-shell. The spandrils between the collars, king-posts, and ridge, are also filled with tracery of varied design. The clerestory windows, six-and-thirty in number, have all been refilled with Messrs. Butler and Heaton's stained glass, and have a very beautiful appearance. The gable at the east end is partially filled with a handsome three-bayed window, given by the executors of the Rev. G. J. Haggitt, the late Incumbent, which is to be filled with stained glass as a memorial of that respected minister and of Mrs. Haggitt. The lower part of the window is blocked up, owing to the height of the chancel roof, but will be filled with an appropriate fresco in colours and gold. The whole of the stonework has been thoroughly cleaned and restored, and the interior walls stuccoed. The old pavement and soil of the church have been cleared away to the depth of one foot, except where the marble ledgers were placed. The inscriptions on these were all carefully copied and numbered according to a corresponding plan of the floor of the church, showing their exact position, the slabs themselves remaining in situ, covered with four inches of concrete. Above this an entirely new floor has been laid, the aisles being covered with Minton's four-inch black and red tiles, in patterns, with appropriate borders, whilst battened flooring has been laid beneath the sittings.

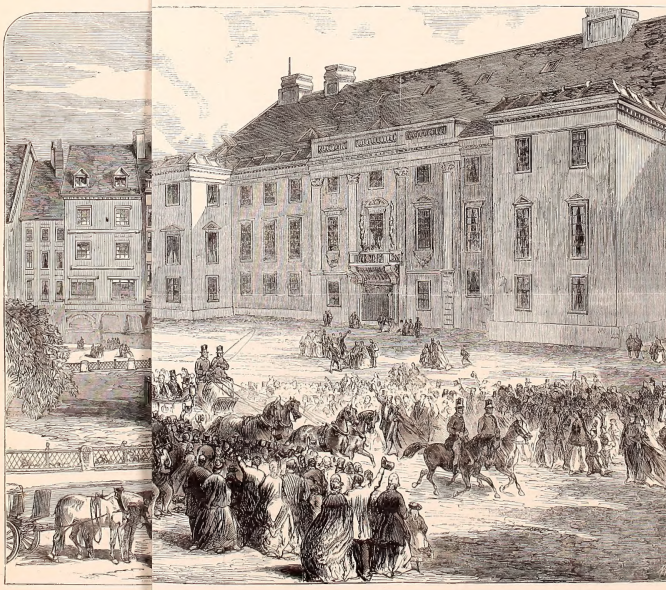
We publish three more Engravings from the sketches of our Special Artist who attends the progress of the Prince and Princess of Wales in their visit to Denmark and Sweden.



Our Illustration represents their arrival at Rosenborg Castle, on Monday, the 19th ult. This edifice, built by King Christian IV., is approached through a park or public garden, and over a foot-bridge crossing a moat that at one time surrounded the castle and formed an important element in its defence. The building is in the style of Italian Renaissance, grafted on the ancient Gothic of Northern Europe. Inigo Jones, at that period chief architect to the King, is said to have furnished the plan for Rosenborg. The interior is a exquisite order, and, but that the notions of the present day on the score of comfort would conflict with the size and distribution of many of the apartments, it might again become a Royal residence. In the entrance-hall there are some tables curiously inlaid with maps showing the extent, at the date to which they belong, of the Danish dominions, and likewise the knowledge of geography which the seamen of that period had acquired. A long corridor with a richly wrought ceiling gives admission to the first suite of apartments. It is enriched with a valuable collection of portraits, and contains many objects of antiquarian or artistic interest. The history of the Danish wars with Sweden is displayed upon the walls in admirable tapestries, and the ceiling of the Riddersaal, or Hall of the Knights, is embellished with sculpture in relief. The floor of this apartment is of wood, painted to represent marble. The coronation chairs are placed at the upper end of the Riddersaal, and in front are the colossal silver lions allegorically representing the Great Belt, the Little Belt, and the Sound. In all state ceremonies these play a leading part, and with the regalia, are appropriately lodged in the same house which holds the coats, arms jewels, paintings, and relics of the Danish Kings for two centuries. The collection of Venetian glass in a small room off the Riddersaal was a present made to one of these Sovereigns. It is very extensive and of rare value.

From Rosenborg Castle the Royal family with the Prince and Princess of Wales, their suite and attendants, drove to the residence of the Hereditary Princess of Denmark widow of the late Prince Frederick, with whom they stayed to lunch. They after wards proceeded to inspect the Museum of Northern Antiquities, another of the remarkable collections of Copenhagen.

THE PRINCE PASSING THROUGH THE GREAT SQUARE OF KONGEN'S NYETORF, COPENHAGEN.

A clear space has been left around each of the very elegant pillars of the nave, and also laid with Minton's tiles. The sittings consist of caken benches, with carved open ends and close-boarded backs. The walls containing the channel arch were in a most dangerous condition, and it was resolved to set up a sustaining buttress on each side of the arch. This important work has been effected, the buttresses having their foundations 11 ft. below the surface; and the contrivance is found to answer exceedingly well, affording abundant support for the additional weight of granite which they sustain in the form of the new roof. As to the exterior of the church, the east and west gables have been carried up to the height of the lofty clerestory, with new coping and handsome stone crosses. The roof is covered with green Welsh slate, and above the great west window is a stone niche corresponding with those on each side of the chancel arch. The operations have been effected, under the direction of Mr. Gilbert Scott, by his assistant, Mr. J. Drayton Wyatt; Mr. Durkin, of Dyce, N. Britain, has acted as general superintendent of the works; the contract for the repairs and general restoration of the edifice was taken by Mr. Thomas Forster; and the whole of the work has been carried out in a satisfactory and the whole of the work has been carried out in a satisfactory manner. A thorough restoration of the organ also having been decided on, the instrument has been taken down by Mr. J. W. Walker, of London, at a total cost of something like £700. A few of the finest stops of the old organ have been retained, but with this exception the work is entirely new.

PROFESSOR OWEN AT BIRMINGHAM.

On Monday evening Professor Owen delivered, in the Temperance Hall, Upper Temple-street, Birmingham, the first of a course of four lectures on "The Classification, Geographical Distribution, and Geological Relations of the Class Mammalia." The hall was filled in every part. The lecturer was accompanied to the platform by a number of the leading gentlemen connected with the Midland Institute.

Professor Owen began by observing that, having been honoured with the trust to deliver four lectures, he had selected a limited topic of the science of natural history, with the view of giving such a sketch of the group of animals which might embody the main points in their present knowledge of them, and only in reference to their characters, their distribution in time and to space. He had therefore selected one of about twenty-four classes into which the animal kingdom was now divided. He had to address a numerous crowd of creatures things, it was generally known that they proceeded in the main by dividing the animal kingdom into two great groups—those with backbones and those without. Of those some were called cold and others warm blooded animals.

The main attribute in which the warm-blooded differed from the cold was this—that they brought forth their young alive; while the cold-blooded all feathered tribes were oviparous. The hairy vertebrated animals nourished their new-born young by the secretion of milk from the mammæ or breasts, which suggested to the great Linnæus the name of mammalia. Mammals were vertebrated animals with an internal skeleton, a double heart, and with that condition of the heart and lungs—the mainspring of the activity of the vital processes—which made the blood to circulate in the same manner discharged the temperature distinguishing them from the cold-blooded animals. He then proceeded to describe the external characters and the skeleton of those animals. This class of animals was recognised by that kind of intuitive perception of natural affinities which Cuvier called the philosophical spirit of great Greek philosopher, Aristotle, who gave the name of zoetics to the class, speaking of the zoetics, Aristotle said there were some which had teeth, like others two, and others none; so that he divided the class primarily according to the modifications of the teeth. Every naturalist could classify animals without understanding the divisions so well as Aristotle, and leaving the wisdom with the fishes. Cuvier, following in the same track, found the varieties of structure in this group, indicated very distinctly several other defining groups, or orders, that had not been recognised before the days of Cuvier. But, in the Cuvierian system, when they came to it from end to end, they found such anomalies as the duck-billed platypus, the kiwi, the ant-eater, the sloth where the horse had the very dull and stupid duck mole above the elephant.

There were indications of an arrangement of class that could not fail to urge the disciples and successors of Cuvier to become dissatisfied with their work by obtaining a truer view of the natural affinities between the different classes. He would ask them to consider the nature of the group as it was at present view, but at once state that the character of the brain was what gave the truest insight into the natural affinities of animals. It was universally so, and that, by arranging the class according to the zoetical principle, they had the most natural progressive arrangement of the class. Man was the head of the tabular system. When they came to compare the brain of the mammals with the brain of man they found that the brain of the lowest mammal (the duck-billed platypus) which he (Professor Owen) had described, and which, with all the cold-blooded animals they were disconnected, and this class exhibited best intelligence, as indicated by the brain. The comparatively small population of Australia, which never got to know the keepers at the Zoological Gardens, and never became reconciled to their confinement, was the country where the hemispheres were united, with a proportionate increase beginning to cover the optic lobes and suppress the cerebellum. They found the most destructive and masterful animals, such as the lion and the tiger. In the Australian wilds were found those quiet, rapids evincing the most sympathy and intelligence, and in whom man found his most cherished companion and most valuable servant, such as the horse and dog. He successively defined the four great brain classes, namely, archencephala, gyrencephala, lissencephala, and lyencephala, and went minutely into the subdivisions, which he explained were determined by peculiarities of subordinate features, as the presence or absence of the development of horns, the structure and position of the eye, the food, &c. These were described in a manner and terminology easy, and illustrated and illustrated by reference to diagrams on the wall.

On the subject of teeth, he examined into the uniformity that prevailed in the structure of the animal. Those that were even-headed had an even number of horns, and their teeth were correspondingly even. He pointed out how those that had odd heads had odd horns, and were unsymmetrical in the development of their teeth.

Having indicated the structural peculiarities of various orders of animals as constituting the base of the subdivisions of the different class, he said that, lastly, they came to the class to which man belonged—namely, that in which the Being was restricted to the human form. Cuvier had given to man the representative of this class, under the name Bimana, the principal peculiarity of which was erectness of posture. Man was the only one that trated animals had one pair of his limbs liberated from the office of locomotion, and capable of being used in manipulation, and in all the rational, and responsible faculties which belonged to him. In the hand alone they found all the structures necessary for the delicate act of grasping, a subject on which alone volumes had been written. Though man came into the world naked and unprotected, yet, by his wonderful powers, he could fabricate and invent his clothing, out-rivalling all natural products. He had no natural weapons—no great canine teeth like the panther, no claws like the lion, no claws like the tiger, nor strong hoofs like other animals—but he could invent more terrible and destructive weapons than any of the lower and lower creation were endowed. Thus he fulfilled his destiny on the planet as the master of living creatures. He could progress—he could rise in the race of beings inhabiting the globe. He was destined to be the master of the earth. How necessary, then, that he should be endowed above all with the responsibility resting upon him, and use well the high gifts which God had bestowed!

The lecturer was loudly applauded.

Austria and Prussia have both dispatched Ministers to the Court of the King of Greece.

Twelve live crocodiles, averaging nine feet in length, have been received at Havre, from Australia.

Measures are being adopted in Greece to re-establish the medicinal baths, and turn to account the thermal waters which that country possesses. The baths of Gulpenon, in the island of Mytilene, have formerly to celebrated for their virtues in rheumatism and diseases of the liver, have been restored. Nearly thirty hours' journey separates Athens from them, and a physician resides there during the season.

In a letter addressed to M. Elie de Beaumont, Father Secchi, of Rome, gives an account of two monuments discovered by him near Adrel, in the Campagna Romana, about 15 kilometres from Palestrina, celebrated for its Cyclopean walls, is situated on the top of a mountain, and being at the foot of the Lucretilian ill provided with water, the Villa Lucilius Varus, as a celebrated inscription tells us, caused an aqueduct 500 ft. high to be constructed between it and the mountain of Guadagnolo. It being expressly stated that he built it with arches and provided it with strong pipes. The great remains of this work, ordered by Pope Pius IX. to secure the supply of water to the town, have led to the discovery of a large portion of the said aqueduct. From the new discoveries it appears that a portion of the lowest point of the aqueduct lies 110 metres below the highest point of the town, a figure which coincides with the 365 ft. mentioned by Pliny. It is, therefore, there is an aqueduct, built 160 years before Christ, in the shape of a reversed syphon under a pressure of eleven atmospheres. It is difficult to say how much water was conveyed by this aqueduct, but it evidently was sufficient for the consumption of the town, since the pipes of the arches measure no less than 5 ft. 9 in. in breadth. The total length of the syphon is about six kilometres. The other discovery is a field under which a complete system of drainage was executed by means of long pipes made of brick clay, and on an average a foot and a half in diameter. They are now stopped up with cement, and are two metres and a quarter below the surface of the soil. This field was probably the pseudo-ground mentioned in the inscription as having been laid out by Iccilianus, whose attention to the interests of his city was ever rewarded, since he was twice appointed Censor, and a statue was erected to his honour.—Gutignan.

The dockyard at Portsmouth and the town of Portsea are joined to the island of Portsmouth by the Portsmouth Bridge, and, inside the walls of this establishment stand four large magazines, which, at present, in addition to a large quantity of powder and other articles of war, contain upwards of 8500 shell, or, as they are expressively named in technical language, "live" shells, the majority of which are for 13-inch guns. When those magazines were first erected they were, no doubt, constructed in all possible security, but were situated from all other buildings the magazines of which might be dangerous. Within the past eighteen months, however, a change has taken place. The magazines were erected within a few yards of the roaring furnaces of the boiler-house of a newly-erected Royal factory for the repair of Armstrong guns and projectiles, and on a very extensive and lucrative scale. A narrow cart-road and some twenty or thirty feet of this now factory only separate the magazines containing shell from the boiler-house. The only cause source to follow under such circumstances (says the Times) would be to remove the magazines and their dangerous contents to some more isolated locality.

The operations of hop picking and packing have been brought to a close throughout the hop-growing districts of Kent, and the result has been such as to give general satisfaction to the planters. Many successful seasons have occurred during the last few years, but the harvest towards its close some of the gardens were beginning to assume a brownish appearance, the leaves were falling from the bine, rain, autumn winds have been enabled to secure the whole of the produce in good condition. Owing, doubtless, to the favourable character of the weather which prevailed during the summer, the hops in many of the plantations were found to be rather smaller in size, although in point of quality extremely fine, and rich in specific weight. The produce of the season, after making allowance for the ususeen in many districts, is considered to be a fair average crop. The yield has ranged from about eight bushels per acre to as many as nineteen or twenty, but the general average will probably be set down at about as the average return. During the past week a considerable quantity of the produce has been disposed of to dealers and brewers at the following quotations:—

On Tuesday night a meeting of working men was held in the Hall of the Edinburgh Mechanics' Institution, for the purpose of taking steps to insure a penny subscription towards the proposed monument to the late Mr. Cadwallader Bates, teacher of writing in the Mechanics' Institution, South Charlotte-street, was called to the chair. The chairman, in opening the proceedings, said he considered it a duty to pay respect to a man similar has done for the working classes of Edinburgh, he thought it was well that they should do so. Mr. Cadwallader Bates was the working man of Edinburgh, numbered among them many kindly, generous, and noble hearts. They would hardly allow the memory of such a man and a woman as Miss Sinclair to pass without doing something to perpetuate it. Mr. Bates was one of the most highly accomplished writing masters of his time, and worthy of themselves. Mr. Wood, publisher, of Leith-street, spoke of Mr. Bates's high public spirit, his kindness, and artistic effort, done much to promote the comfort and advantage of the operative classes of the city. He considered it a duty to take steps in order to raise a subscription in behalf of the memorial proposed to be erected to Mr. Bates. Mr. Cadwallader Bates, Mr. Leslie moved "In order to carry out the wishes and views of the working classes in Edinburgh towards the memory of the late Cadwallader Bates, teacher of writing in the

THE FARM.

"How are your turnips?" is the question which greets the farmer at every sale and market table, and a melancholy shake of the head is too often the only appropriate answer. At this season the ever-watchful Mr. Mechi steps forward and assures his brother farmers that he has lost so much aldermanic girth by refraining, under the system of Mr. Banting (or, rather, of Mr. Moore, seeing that his "Dietary of Corpulence" had run into three editions and gathered hundreds of believers for years before Mr. Banting was heard of) from the lump of sugar which he loved, that it behoves them to consider the value of saccharine food on their cattle during the forthcoming winter's march. While the philosopher of Leadenhall-street thus draws instruction from the teacup, Mr. Dimsdi has again taken up his crook and his pastoral about crossing the Southdown ewes with the Cotswold ram; and Mr. Tromper, who proposed his health, has begged to differ from him. The honourable member compliains that Mr. Walker's answer to him is an ex parte one, and that no one has proved that such a cross will make the mutton coarser. Probably they have not; but it is because they think the size and formation of the Cotswold head too much, and dare not risk their ewes, even at the highest prices of wool, for the sake of mere science. The Cheviot breeders of half-breds have a well-founded dislike to using Cotswolds instead of Leicesters on this very account; and we hear of one Scotch Southdown ewes, upon part of which the experiment was also tried, with a very great loss as lambing time. In this very Bock, too, the half-breds could not live and keep their condition like the pure Downes. Hence we do not wonder at Mr. Tromper proclaiming an opinion so diametrically opposed to Mr. Dimsdi's pastoral friend in council; and if he had drawn the "Salthill indictment" he might have made it much more stringent than Mr. Walter did.

The fifty-third number of the Royal Agricultural Society's Journal, which has just been published, contains some interesting agricultural notes, by Mr. Bear, M.P., on the Returns of 1861, for England and Wales. It would seem that the total number of persons engaged in agriculture in that year, as compared with 1851, shows a decrease of 67,337, of which four 79,000 are females. In the other hand, agricultural labourers there is a slight increase, while the land produce has increased from 30,351 to 30,766. The most important part of it is that, while the men owning land decrease by 1916, the women increase by 2567; and that the landladies are in the proportion of two landlords of 504. Farm-bailiffs have multiplied in the same period from 10,561 to 15,698; and while than indoor servants show a decrease of 83,316, outdoor have only increased by 2,926. Shepherds, however, which numbered 12,517, have been more than double; and agricultural stockmen, ecce only a moderate band of 104, can scarcely claim a great experience—Mr. Torr and Mr. Randell, from Lincolnshire and Gloucestershire, who secured the two first prizes awarded in those own districts by the increase of sheep and the enlarged size of farms. It is the farms varying from 50 to 200 acres which are being principally absorbed: and it is a well-known fact that in the old days small holdings under ten acres have disappeared. That they are to some extent a test of the labourer's prosperity is proved by the fact that the largest proportion of them are found in the counties where labour is by best. The tables also show that the number of cottages with three new classes of industry into action. There are now 236 agricultural implement proprietors (with 1295 engine and machine workers) where there were only 20, and 1714 in flax and hemp where the previous staff, which was once just eleven strong.

Mr. Cotwell has announced two sales—the late Mr. Gell's, at Grimston Lodge, near York, on Oct. 20; and Lord Suffield's, at Hortsted, near Norwich, on Nov. 2. In the former Goldsmith, the roan number in the class at Newcastle which was won by Boyd, Butterby Hith (who is, we believe, not going to be turned next year), has won eight first prizes already, and his dam was one of the cows in the very thirty-seven Grimston ledge lots. There are two Cardigan cows, a blood which, in Mr. John Wood's hands, has produced some of the best cow and yearling heifer—Corinne and Blue Belle—that we have seen out this year. Lord Suffield's number forty-three, and there is this peculiarity in the catalogue, that the names of the breeders of the bulls are given in every pedigree. On Oct. 13, Mr. Stratford sells thirtynine of Mr. Harrison's of Coxwold, near Market Harborough, who has retired lately on Waterloo Duke by Third Grand Duke from Waterloo 91st. Mr. Maidstone has sold off at Fourth Grand Duke and Third Duke of Thorndale (each costing him three hundred) for 500 gs, and retains the former at Havering Park. He has lately had an overnter to Lady Oxford Duke, and with which he has the first prize at Worcester.

Mr. Charles Howard, who, it will be remembered, won the first bullcalf prize at Leeds with a twin bull, has just had two sets of twins in his herd, one from Flora Cowyne and the other from Sunflower, who, strange to say, has brought doublets three times in succession. Old Francis Gwynne has also produced a roan bull calf, the very last shoot of the Second Duke of Thorndale cow; and Sophia Stone begets the dam of six calves already, and only six years and three months herself, is one to calve again immediately. The progenitor of Mr. Duckham, that the birth of calves should date from Jan. 1, has been thrown out by the Bath and West of England Society. Oddly enough, the editor of the "Hereford Herd-Book" was for it, and the editor of the "Devon Herd-Book" against it. When are the shorthorn and devons herd-books to declare their sentiments on this point? We hear from Skye that Mr. Stewart, of Duntulm, has again carried off a large number of the principal prizes at Portree. There is in no romance at these shows as the Highland cows and their calves walk twenty miles to them and back again, and think nothing of it. Mr. M'Combie is going, we hear, to Portree with some of his Angus heifers and bulls. Adding to bullocks, he has nearly 360 at Tillyfour.

A trial of naval rifles converted into breech-loaders on the Monitorm principle has taken place on board the Excellent gunnery-ship at Portsmouth, when the Government officials, in charge of the Secretary Monitorm rifle, or the ordinary Enfield ammunition as now issued, can be fired with the converted rifle. This weapon is to be used as a musket or breech loader. It can also be loaded at the breech with the prepared or the Enfield cartridge. The cost of the conversion is stated to be about 30s. per gun.

The journals of Vienna state that a few nights ago a thief got into the house occupied by Lord Bloomfield, the British Ambassador, situated at Weidlingau, near that city, and concealed himself until every one was in bed. He then broke in the ambassador's bedroom, and was disturbed in the act. An alarm was given, and the servant found that his gentleman's clothes had been overhauled, and that the thief had taken all other rings encountered with brilliants, a valuable gold watch, a silver casket, and loose coin to the amount of from 500 to 600 florins carried off. Several English bank-notes were left untouched.

A private letter from Red River settlement says:—"We have received the most favourable accounts from the south. It is a very strange time of the year for them to come here, which circumstance, taken in connection with their suspicious conduct, has caused a painful sensation. Governor Macdonald went to meet them as they were approaching our bounds, with the view of ascertaining their object, but they refused to say anything to him, they would not do anything of the kind for him or anyone else. Scheming Americans, who have long been endeavouring to get us to cry for the annexation to Minnesota, are suspected of urging those unwelcome visitors to come here, and our impression is that such suspicions are correct. Some of them are saying to us, 'Why don't you join the States, and you will be sure of constant and ample protection. Britain will not move a finger for you.'"—Toronto Globe.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

From our Correspondent, dated Thursday Evening.

CONFIDENCE having in a great measure been restored to commercial circles, increased operations have taken place in the market for Home Securities, and the quotations have generally improved. The Bank of England has received a further supply of bullion during the past week, and the amount of the rate of discount remains unchanged. It has been the usage of the large operators to consider that one long drawn will be an easier range in the course of money than a short one; but the Bank of England, in the present instance, has rapidly as might have been expected, disappointed them.

The Foreign Stock and Continental discount market is certainly on the increase. The demand for Austrian, Italian, and Spanish Securities is very active, at the annexed prices for the most approved paper:—

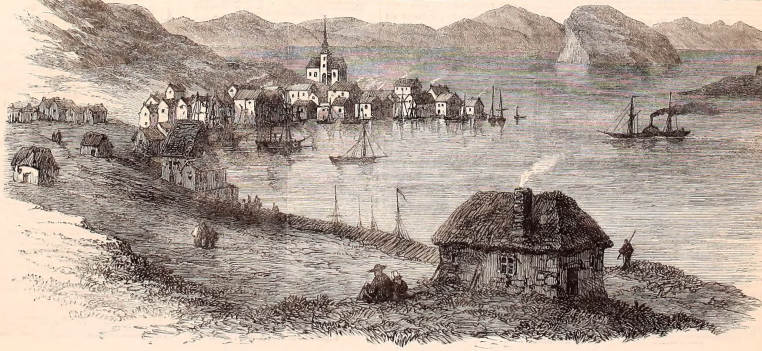
THE NEW BISHOP OF TASMANIA.

We give a Portrait of the Right Rev. Dr. Bromby, the new Bishop of Tasmania, who was consecrated in Canterbury Cathedral on the 29th of June last, together with Dr. Jeune, the Bishop of Peterborough, and Dr. Samuel Crowther, the negro Bishop of a missionary diocese on the west coast of Africa. Dr. Bromby was introduced on that occasion by Bishop Nixon, his predecessor in the see of Tasmania, and by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, whose diocese has been for some time past the scene of his labours as the Principal of the Church of England Normal Training College, at Cheltenham. We have engraved, on another page, a representation of the handsome piece of plate which was presented to him by the students and former students of the college, at a meeting held on Saturday, the 17th ult.

THE RIGHT REV. DR. BROMBY, THE NEW BISHOP OF TASMANIA.



HAMMERFEST, IN NORWAY.

The town of Hammerfest, the most northerly in the world, is situated in latitude 70 deg. 39 min., which is the same parallel as that of the frozen seas or straits where Sir John Franklin and his comrades perished, in the western hemisphere. Nevertheless, the town of Hammerfest has a population of 1100 or 1200 souls. The neighbouring district, hemmed in by mountains and rocks which are bare of all vegetable growth, has a very desolate appearance. In the winter, for two months there is perpetual night. But the brilliancy of the northern lights, of the stars and moon, and the reflection of light from the sheet of snow, help to illumine the scene and in a measure to compensate for the absence of the sun's cheering rays. For a corresponding period in summer the sun never sinks below the horizon. During this time the port of Hammerfest is generally full of vessels, and a lively trade is carried on with Russia, England, and France, principally in dried codfish. The Spitzbergen trade also forms an important branch of industry at Hammerfest, reindeer, walrus, and eiderdown being the principal objects there sought for. Even in the coldest winter the sea never freezes along the northern coast of Norway. This is due to the Gulf stream, which, as is known, impinges on the western coast of Norway and sweeps along its shores till it loses itself in the Arctic Ocean. It is, indeed, by no means a rare occurrence that parts of trees and other produce of a tropical clime are washed ashore near Hammerfest. The influence of the Gulf stream alone renders it possible for human beings to live at this place, and makes the temperature endurable.

Our Engraving is from a sketch taken by a Norwegian artist, which has been courteously placed at our disposal by the Rev. M. R. Barnard, of Margaretting, Essex, late Chaplain to the British Embassy in Norway. It gives a correct representation of the town and harbour, which, as our readers will remember, has recently been visited by Prince Alfred and his party in the expedition of the Racoon and Black Eagle to those Arctic shores.

JAPANESE SOLDIERS MARCHING.

Our Special Artist in Japan, Mr. C. Wirgman, one of whose sketches we have engraved this week, writes as follows on the subject:—"The Japanese are always drilling. From morning till night they never seem to cease, and they certainly ought to be perfect by this time; but the uncomfortable manner in which they march proves the contrary. The rear man is always looking at the front man's feet, to see whether he is keeping step or not, which is unsoldier-like. It must be owned, however, that the troops stationed at Yokohama seem to be raw recruits, which may in a manner account for it. There are some, indeed, of the Tycoon's regular infantry who are well up in their drill, and who manœuvre perfectly, so that the American Minister, who lately saw a review at Jeddo, was astonished at their proficiency. But perfection in drill does not ensure perfection in fighting. The Japanese have too many officers; one to five men seems to be the average."

HAMMERFEST, IN NORWAY, LATELY VISITED BY PRINCE ALFRED.

THE EXPLOSION OF GUNPOWDER MAGAZINES AT ERITH.

EARLY on Saturday morning last two gunpowder magazines, situated on the southern bank of the Thames, between Woolwich and Erith, exploded with terrific violence, killing eight or nine persons, if not more, wounding others, and carrying consternation and alarm among the inhabitants for miles round. Although the scene of the catastrophe is distant about fifteen miles from Charing-cross, the shock was felt more or less throughout the whole metropolis, and even at places forty and fifty miles from the spot—as far as Newmarket and Cambridge on the one hand, and Windsor and Guildford on the other. The explosion occurred in a gunpowder depôt belonging to Messrs. John Hall and Sons, and almost simultaneously in a magazine of smaller size used by the Low Wood Gunpowder Company, formerly known as the firm of Messrs. Daye and Barker, both of them located in the Plumstead marshes, on the margin of the Thames, two miles west of Erith, and about an equal distance from the village of Belvedere, on the North Kent Railway. Here, on about twenty acres of ground, separated for obvious reasons from the rest of the neighbouring houses, but in three cottages in the immediate vicinity of the scene of their daily labour, lived a few working men with their families. One was George Rayner, who acted as storekeeper in the depôt of Messrs. Hall, and who was a married man with a family, and another, named Walter Silver, also married, acted in a similar capacity under the Low Wood Gunpowder Company. Each of these had a cottage to himself about 100 or 200 yards from the magazines, and the rest, who were men employed in the larger depôt, occupied a cottage in common. The Messrs. Hall have been engaged in the business of fabricating gunpowder for more than fifty years, and have executed large contracts from time to time both for our own and many foreign Governments. They have a large factory in the neighbourhood of Faversham, in Kent, occupying about 200 acres of ground, part of the works at which were erected in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. There the work of manufacturing and packing gunpowder is conducted by a body of trained artisans, with all the safeguards and precautions suggested by experience; and within the last few years the proprietors have purchased a large tract of adjacent land in order the more completely to seclude their operations from the habitations of men. Their magazine at Belvedere was a substantial building, about 50 ft. square, and consisting of two floors. It was erected five or six years ago, at a cost of about £3000, and around it were eighteen acres of land, with a view to isolate the building. For miles at that part of the river there is an embankment, which protects the low-lying marshes from inundation. Both their depôt and that of the Low Wood Gunpowder Company stood close behind the embankment. The quantity of gunpowder stored in Messrs. Hall's magazine at the time of the explosion, and in two of their barges which lay off the jetty, is estimated by themselves at about 750 barrels in the depôt, and perhaps 200 more in the barges, each barrel containing 100lb. The quantity in the magazine of the Low Wood Company was only about 9000lb., as they were expecting a large supply of powder from their mills at Newton-in-Cartmel, Lancashire, which had been delayed through export and other orders deliverable at their other depôts. Their magazine at Belvedere was about 40 ft. long by 30 ft. in width, and consisted of two floors. It was erected about four years ago, and stood at a distance of sixty or seventy yards from that of Messrs. Hall. Both Messrs. Halls magazine and that of the Low Wood Company had a wooden jetty projecting into the river for the loading and unloading of gunpowder. It should be understood that these were places used entirely for the storage of gunpowder, and in no sense for its manufacture, and that none but experienced men were employed at them. Rayner had been storekeeper to Messrs. Hall for twelve years, and accustomed to the manipulation of gunpowder from his boyhood. He was an intelligent and most efficient man, and they had complete confidence in him. Between their mills at Faversham and the magazine at Belvidere, a distance of about thirty miles, the gunpowder is conveyed in sailing-barges, each navigated usually by a couple of men, and two of these, as has been stated, were moored alongside the jetty on Saturday morning, discharging cargo. The gunpowder, carefully packed in barrels, is borne on trucks with copper wheels along wooden rails, in order to preclude the possibility of a spark from friction; and the operation is conducted with other precautions, such as the wearing of list slippers by the men engaged in it. By common consent, the explosion occurred at between eighteen and twenty minutes before seven o'clock in the morning, and it is presumed that Messrs. Hall's men were then embarking one of the barges. A clock in the house of Mr. Henry Hall, at South Darenth, about three miles from Dartford and seven from the powder magazines, was stopped by the explosion itself at precisely eighteen minutes to seven. There were three distinct explosions immediately following each other, and the first deposit of persons conversant with the locale is that the first and last explosion on board one of the barges, larger magazine, and some of the burning fragments alighting in it caused an explosion infinitely more appalling, and which was instantaneously followed by the explosion of the smaller depôt. At Erith and Belvedere, where the shock was felt at 6.45, nothing produced by it is described as awful beyond description. The sound produced by it is described as awful beyond description. The sound produced by it is described as awful beyond description. The sound

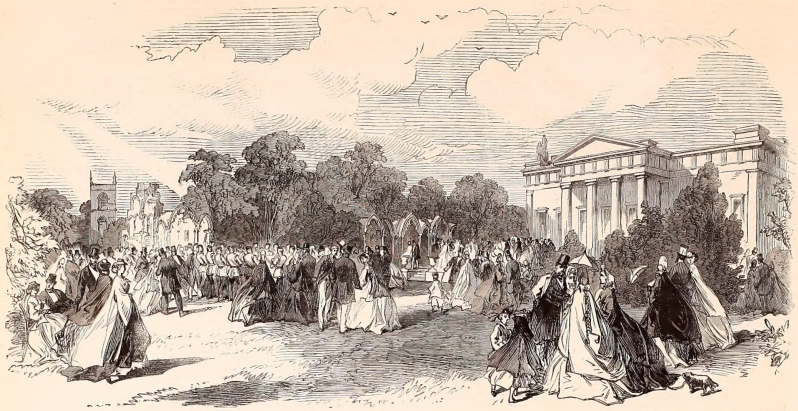
ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

CAPTAIN BURTON'S new book, the account of his mission to Dahome—as we presume we must spell it, after him—seems destined to create a sensation which looks of travel seldom do; not on account, perhaps, of its intrinsic merits, considerable as they are, but because it contains a chapter called the negro's place in nature. What our greatest African traveller has said before, he says now; but he now does it ex cathedrâ, and it is impossible not to see that his ideas have a reference to the question which has arisen in America, the struggle which is going on over the water. We hear, however, that Captain Burton's conclusions are to be seriously questioned.

Lord Wodehouse is, after all, to be the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and, in the absence from that post of the Prince of Wales or Prince Alfred, perhaps no one will be a better Viceroy. His manners are pleasing, his talents of the first order. He was first-class in classics at Christ Church, in 1842, and a wrangler in the Cambridge Mathematical Tripos in the year but one before Mr. Whitbread. His Parliamentary and official career has been of the most varied and successful kind. He was secretary of legation at St. Petersburg when not only proved his talents but won golden opinions from all parties. Then comes the question, why shelve such a useful adept by putting him into the Irish Viceroyalty? Lord Wodehouse is, we believe, a thorough Irish gentleman by birth, and was economically good-natured and endowed with a certain amount of tact? For the idea that one of the Princes of Wales or Princes of Viceroy in Ireland was eagerly caught up by the Irish themselves, and cleverly put forward by a powerful writer in some letters in The Times. The appointment of Lord Wodehouse, excellent in itself, will fall with somewhat of a disappointment on the warmhearted and susceptible Irish; not that they have any objection to the new Viceroy doing diplomatist and rising statesman, but that they had set their hearts upon having a true Prince. John Bull had the same self-indulgent heart upon utilising the Royal family a little; and so both Paddy and John will be disappointed, like the guest, who, having determined to feast upon partridges, and finding a fine pheasant being carved instead, thereupon the previous courses, is bitterly disappointed when they bring in grouse, a species of game which he never touches.

The story of an intercepted prize-fight is not often interesting to the drawing-room, but, as an Archbishop has thought fit to write a pastoral on the subject, and the Irish police have shown themselves much more active in this affair than their English brethren of the blue tunics and pewter buttons ever did in what is called their own country, because it is really a serious blow to prize-fighting, and will probably be the first step towards the discontinuance of such gatherings, we think the noble art of self-defence." It would seem that the sporting world in America are desirous of retrieving their honour as pugilists, which was utterly destroyed by the recent fight between two of their champions, that he did not care to fight again. When Mr. Weller bests the beadle who puts him in the parish stocks, he tells the gaping crowd that they send him "a fresh beadle, for he'd quite spoilt this one"; and so the Americans sent over a fresh fistic champion, one Coburn, who was to fight our Englishman, Mace, for "whip" him to nothing; but their man did not show—the police were too active; and the gentlemen with broken noses and damaged eyes, of whom they had so many to "post" their money on the "event" declare it was nothing less than a "sell." Archbishop Collyer, who has evidently been studying the dips into Church history to prove that prize-fighting is unlawful. He tells his "very reverend brethren" that, "passing over the decrees of the Council of Trent, it will be sufficient to refer to the Bull of Pope Pontiff Benedict XIV. excommunicates the principal actors in such fights, their seconds, and all who are designedly present." Happily, we do not have been better if Benedict had been quoted some years ago in regard to Donnybrook Fair, and to stay faction-fights? As no man professes that prize-fighting is a Christian exercise, or that fathering your neighbour's face is acting the part of a good Samaritan. Surely the venerable Council of Trent, which had to deal with matters of far other benevolent purposes, might have been let alone in the instance.



Owen Meredith, a very fitting poet, and one who will be the first bonnie diplomatist and a man of letters, and, moreover, dear to us as Robert Bulwer Lytton, son and heir-apparent to Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, has married, on Tuesday, Miss Villiers, a niece of Lord Clarendon. Let us all sing, "Hymen, O Hymenæ!" Mr. Bulwer Lytton's novels of the talent of his father he may, we will only hope, little way further out of the steps of mysticism, will win a name dearer to most men, and certainly wider and more enduring, than any won by a mere diplomatist. It is well to see that the latter still may connect the literature and the State, and pleasant to recall former Foreign Secretaries in the persons of Canning, Lamb and Matthew Prior. Let us hope that hereafter the new bridegroom will be as well remembered.

Mr. Banting, rejecting with indignation many of the absurd stories trumped up about his system, has formally denied that it has caused the death of anyone of whom he has been told, most especially his own death. It is pleasant to hear a man assert that he is alive and well, and more pleasant still to believe him. Besides, he says that his system has done much good. That "Banting's" is injurious to studious men every one will readily assert; the best way to prove this would be to show that carbon and nitrogen, of both of which Mr. Banting would largely deprive us, are of essential service to the system and the brain. Let us hope that the results of the studious and literary men of any worth is that they overwork themselves. They may hardly be able to prevent this. Work is pleasant, and the desire to carry it on does not decrease, and the power to do so certainly does. Hence the sudden deaths of men who work long into the night, and neglect their meals and their rest. Professor Estcourt fell a victim to thought, feeling, and hard work too intense; and last week a hard-working barrister and literary man died suddenly in the house of his chambers in the Temple. Mr. Banting does not kill people in that way; and if our medical lecturers who have opened their schools just at this period will give us some account of the progress of their work and over study, they will be doing some good to the pushing, active, zealous men of this overworking age.

The season has indeed begun, so far as amusements go. Two pyromanic concerts, with two managers of the name of Mr. Wells, Holborn and All-Ben-Jenkins figuring away, a wizard in full swing, two spiritual brothers who are fond of getting themselves and the wits of others who observe them into a fog, and a new piece at the theatre in Adelphi playing the inexhaustible Irish Ambassador and Teddy the Tiler, a true domestic Robinson and the Seven Friars, have opened the legitimate to crowded houses, and a new—bran new—foreign actress, with accent and all, at the Princess's. So far we by no means see that the season will be over-supplied with novelties, but we hope for the best. Perhaps, after all, the "Great Unknown" will fall with somewhat of a disappointment on the warmhearted and susceptible Irish; not that they have any objection to the new Viceroy doing diplomatist and rising statesman, but that they had set their hearts upon having a true Prince. John Bull had the same self-indulgent heart upon utilising the Royal family a little; and so both Paddy and John will be disappointed, like the guest, who, having determined to feast upon partridges, and finding a fine pheasant being carved instead, thereupon the previous courses, is bitterly disappointed when they bring in grouse, a species of game which he never touches.

The story of an intercepted prize-fight is not often interesting to the drawing-room, but, as

AUXILIARY SCREW STEAM-SHIPS FOR THE AUSTRALIAN TRADE.

Our Engraving on page 372 represents the new iron screw steam-ship London, of 1700 tons burden, which made her trial-trip on Thursday, the 22nd ult., from Tilbury to the Nore Light-ship and back. She is the first of a new commercial steam fleet, built by the owners, Messrs. Money Wigram and Sons, of Blackwall Yard. She made her trial-trip most successfully, conveying a party of nearly 200 ladies and gentlemen, among whom were Sir Henry Young, late Governor of Tasmania, and Lady Young, and many well-known shippers from the port of London. The ship was launched about two months ago, since which her masts and spars have been supplied and her machinery fitted by Messrs. Humphreys and Tennant, of Deptford. The London is a fully-rigged clipper-ship—her engines not exceeding 200-horse power, and being intended rather as an auxiliary to aid the ship when becalmed or delayed by adverse winds than as the sole motive power relied on. Although not in good sailing trim, upon the top of a flood tide she attained a speed of more than eleven knots, with a singular freedom from vibration. Captain Martin, who commands the London, is confident of making the voyage to Melbourne, from port to port, in sixty days. The time usually occupied by fast sailing vessels is eighty or ninety days.

The International Association for the Advancement of the Social Sciences opened its third annual session on Monday, the 26th ult., in the Royal Palace of Amsterdam, which the King of Holland had placed at the disposal of the association. The opening sitting was held in the ball-room, which was crowded in every part. The proceedings began with speeches delivered by M. Vervoort, the president; and M. Berg Van Musen-Muilkerk, eschevin of the city; after which M. Couvreur, the secretary-general, read a long report on the labours of the different committees and of the council of the association, in which he announced that the council had conferred the title of honorary member on Lord Brougham, of whose long and useful life he gave a rapid and interesting sketch, from the time of his entering the University of Edinburgh, in 1786, down to the present day. The meeting then broke up, and the members met in their various sections, of which there are five—namely, legislation, public instruction, art and literature, public health and beneficence and political economy.

THE MAGAZINES.

So long as "Wives and Daughters" is continued, the Cornhill will not want for one attractive feature. It is a simple, quiet, natural story, displaying much insight into character and skill in depicting the various phases of English social life, from the highest to the lowest spheres, which persons of average social position may be supposed to enter. Beneath familiarity of style and unobtrusiveness of manner a considerable amount of power is clearly latent, which will probably manifest itself more energetically before the story is finished. At present its leading characteristic is an easy elegance; and we know not where to look for a fiction more agreeable on the whole. "Margaret Denzil"—a violent contrast in all respects—is continued in this number, maintaining to the last its character as a sullen, moody story, intricate and unwholesome as an Indian jungle, but bearing throughout the impress of fine intellect, and an artistic elaboration which loudly discriminates it from the class of sensation novels. If it be really, as reported, by Mr. George M'Donald, he has taken considerable pains to disguise his workmanship, and, while gaining in voluminous, has parted with all its dramatic elements of power and pathos. Some scenes are certainly much in his manner, as, for example, the description of Margaret holding Perhaps the most striking paper in the periodical is "A Visit to a Convict Lunatic Asylum." The account given of the establishment is so far favourable as to convert a very repulsive subject into one not only pleasant to read about. It is, moreover, a paper with a purpose, leading forward what may be termed the medical view of the controverted question of criminal lunacy. It is rendering the public a good service to make them acquainted with views usually found only in professional journals, which have been recently obtained a bad name from their association with an indiscreet philanthropy. Another able writer discusses the question of middle-class education, with especial reference to Mr. Matthew Arnold's recent proposal to make it a State concern. Without being considered on its merits, this plan is pronounced impracticable in the present condition of public feeling; but the writer, in whom we seem to recognise Miss Mathews, thinks that the consideration of it may have the effect of inducing the classes interested to take up the matter for themselves. "Flower Farming" is an amusing account of the cultivation of odoriferous plants in Provence. It appears from an advertisement that the publishers are about to issue a selection of the illustrations which have appeared in this magazine, printed from the original woodcuts.

Macmillan proffers a varied number, with several light articles, agreeably written, but of no particular interest. The more marked exception is the editor's paper on "Dr. Chalmers," which is evidently the product of a very thorough acquaintance with the subject and a very sincere sympathy with his hero. It is rather laboured, but evinces great intellectual vigour. Principal Tulloch's discipleship in the Tubingen school of theologians is valuable for its minute account of the peculiar system of theology running in vogue in the University of Wirtemberg. It is candid and intelligent, in many parts beautifully written, but somehow leaves an impression that more might have been made of the subject. Mr. Kingsley's story is pastpicturesque and stirring as usual. No greater contrast can be imagined than that between it and "A Sea Side Soil," with its tender reminiscences and preferred religious feeling. As a story, it has not up to this time been very interesting, but its critical characters are fascinating—the first of long experience of and profound sympathy with some of the deepest moods of the human heart. The picture of the dying enthusiast in the present instalment is indescribably pathetic.

Fraser is, for once, rather a poor number. "The Decline of Whiggism," by a social writer, and contains some good hits. "Results of The Census of England and Wales is a good article on social questions, breathing an elevated and philanthropic spirit; and the description of a New Zealand bush-fire is graphic. There is nothing else noticeable except a severe critique on the recent competition for the Art-Union prize for sculpture. Unfortunately, the writer does not give his name; and, as his article is not illustrated with any representations of the works criticised, those who have not seen them can form no idea whether his objurgations are merited or not.

Blackwood is excellent. "Cornelius O'Dowd" terminates his "O'Dowdiana" with a half promise of resuming them on some future occasion. We shall be glad if he does, for, with much prolixity and more bookishness, there is in these papers genuine humour and subtle disquisition, and it will be a good while before we encounter such another pleasant blending of Irish and Italian drollery as Mr. Lever's Hibernian extraction and Trasteverine residence have rendered natural to him. No one would be surprised to learn that we are also indebted to him for "Tony Butler," which is particularly good in its Irish portions. The author, whoever he is, possesses the art of rendering his story attractive by a constant succession of stirring incidents, and the rich comic element is always present to a degree that prevents any painful stretch of the attention. There is a good article on the public schools of London, and "Our Lady's Tragedy" contains much poetry. Fitzpatrick's Life of Archbishop Whately is reviewed in a very depressing spirit; but we do not think that the reviewer has done anything more to tell us beyond what is certainly the remarkable fact, that the Archbishop was indebted for his promotion to the recommendation of another political economist, the late Mr. N. W. Senior. The number is concluded by a feeling tribute to the late Captain Speke, many of whose journals were first given to the world in this periodical. There is much in this little notice that is very pleasant to read and become associated with; but, as it cannot in any attempt a more extended memoir of his friend, we trust he will be more carefully on his guard against bombastic exaggeration than he has been here. To say that "the world stands aghast" because of one of the traveller's melancholy fate is simply preposterous. There is a charming if fanciful poem, entitled "W. W. S.," which we have hardly err in reading William Washington Story.

"Mont Blanchy," in the London Society, is one of the best of the melodramatic class of tales, depending for its interest not on a succession of shocks, but on the gradual working out of a double problem in psychology and physiology. Considerable power and considerable variety of character, though the writer is much more studious of singularity than of consistency. The last part of "Miss Brontë is palpable, and not unskilful. "Yaxley" ends in a happy marriage. It is characteristic of the prevalent taste in novelwriting that the author apologises for marriage as a natural use of bigamy, on the plea that, though apparently a plagiarist from his contemporaries, he is really only in the fashion. Along with them, his tale having been written three years since. There is a very interesting account of Miss Bellamy, an Irish actress of the last century; and a good, though by no means complete, review of "Enoch Arden."

Almost everything in Temple Bar is clever, Mr. Yates's story eminently so. "Family Club Life in England" is an account whether serious or jocular we cannot decide, of the Clubs in which, in the middle classes, realised through the omnipotence of the co-operative principle, "Military Bachelor's" is an examination into the merits of the Armstrong and Whitworth guns, pronounced in the conclusion, "A plague on both your houses." On the whole, this is a very good number. The St. James's is also readable, but presents no feature of marked interest. The Churchman's Magazine is respectable, and Good Words and London Society are both excellent in their peculiar and widely different departments. Captain Cheney's history of General Lee's Virginian campaigns is of itself worth more than the shilling demanded for the British Quarterly Review. This periodical has also a good memoir of Goussal Grant. The Popular Science Review is replete with information on many subjects. We chronicle the appearance of a new, and apparently very meritorious, medical serial in the Journal of British Ophthalmology, edited by Mr. Jabez Hogg.

Our Mutual Friend. By Charles Dickens. No. 6. In this number Mr. Dickens commences a new division of his story, and we are introduced to several new characters. Bradley Headstone, the decrorous, selfish, young schoolmaster, is a capital portrait, not at all in the common way, and so far undefaced by any of the exaggerations in which Mr. Dickens so frequently indulges. The deformed girl, who takes up so large a portion of the number, reminds us a good deal of the Marchioness, and the comparison is by no means to her advantage. On the whole, this part is not brilliant it is too replete with mere oddity to sustain Mr. Dickens's reputation as a humourist, and offers too many examples of his propensity to fill his space with mere sketches that contribute nothing to the progress of his story. There are, however, enough of smart sayings and graphic bits of description to carry the reader agreeably through, on the whole, and leave him pleasantly expectant of the things which are to come.

TESTIMONIAL TO THE BISHOP OF TASMANIA FROM THE STUDENTS OF THE NORMAL COLLEGE, CHELTENHAM.

In another part of our Impression will be found an Engraving of the portrait of the Right Rev. Dr. Bromby, the new Bishop of Tasmania, by Mr. Van Diemen's Land. The illustration which appears on this page represents a piece of plate which was presented to Dr. Bromby on Saturday, the 17th inst., by the students and former students of the Church of England Normal Training College at Cheltenham, and of St. Mary's Hall, the Female Training College, over which institutions he had presided for many years. It was manufactured by Messrs. Bernard and Son, of London, and consisted of an elegant épergne about 2 feet of massive silver, the design of which may be thus described:—From the base rise two lofty palmtrees, whose long, thick drooping leaves overspin in front and form the summit of which rest a crystal bowl, the latter being for the occasion filled with a beautiful bouquet of flowers. At the foot of the trees rest a camel and two Arabs. The base is worked with the leaves of the water-lily on burnished ground. On a polished shield, surrounded by the Bishop's arms, is the following inscription:—"To the Right Reverend C. H. Bromby, D.D., from the present and former students of the Normal College, Cheltenham, Sept. 17, 1864;" and around the base is the following:—"Presented in token of their affectionate regard for one who was their pastor, tutor, and friend." Underneath the épergne, on elaborate silver stand-boards, is a silver cover, and one dozen massive silver teaspoons were presented to his lordship.

The ceremony of presentation took place in one of the large rooms of the college, which was tastefully decorated with evergreens and flowers, interspersed with appropriate quotations from Scripture. Besides the students, there were present many of the personal friends of the Bishop and his family, the Rev. James Rice, M. W. Brereton, who, after the proceedings had been opened with prayer, called upon the Rev. J. Lane, master of the parish church schools, to read the address, as follows:—

TO THE RIGHT REV. C. H. BROMBY, D.D., LORD BISHOP OF TASMANIA.

We, the undersigned, former students of the Normal College, Cheltenham, wish to express to your Lordship (now that you are about to enter upon the arduous duties of your new diocese) our deep sense of the many advantages which we have enjoyed, as students, under your care and guidance.

We look to recognising your Lordship as our representative in the bishopric of Tasmania; but, although we rejoice that you have been chosen to fill so high and holy an office, it is with deep regret that we contemplate your removal from amongst us and the termination of your connection with this College—a connection which has existed from its foundation, and which has been so beneficial to us and so advantageous in the cause which it was founded to promote.

Whilst we readily see many reasons for your Lordship's acceptance of the appointment proposed, the sympathy and kindness to us at all times, and the spiritual counsel which you have given, and especially during the time of illness which has just passed over the College, we feel that we are about to lose a valuable and tried friend.

We shall ever cherish the memory of your faithful advocacy of the cause of Christ's education; and your active efforts to counteract the ill effects of the late changes introduced into the Government system will, we are assured, be ever remembered by teachers generally with feelings of deep gratitude.

We ask you, therefore, to accept the accompanying testimonial, which we offer with affectionate and grateful hearts to you and your beloved pastor, tutor, and friend. And we pray the Almighty God to grant you and yours a safe and prosperous journey, to watch over and protect you in all dangers and adversities, and to bless your labours in the wider sphere of usefulness to which he has called you.

The gift was then handed to Dr. Bromby, who returned thanks in a feeling and appropriate speech. Votes of thanks were afterwards addressed by the Rev. J. Draper, vice-president of the Saltley Training College, near Birmingham, and several other gentlemen.

The King of the Sandwich Islands has called a convention of the subjects in his kingdom, representing every district which has an existence for the last twelve years. In doing this his Majesty professes great anxiety for the welfare and prosperity of his people.

The Emigration Commissioners have chartered the Matilda Attelling, 676 tons, Captain Power; and the Queen Bee, 726 tons, Captain Rembald; both at £12 10s. 6d. per statute adult, for the conveyance of emigrants from Plymouth to Adelaide, South Australia. The Matilda Attelling is appointed to receive her passengers on the 9th, and the Queen Bee on the 21st of November next.—The New Zealand Government Emigration Board dispatched during the month of September two vessels with emigrants, principally married people, to whose free passages were granted. The first, the Helenslee, sailed on the 16th ult. from Glasgow with 260 statute adults and the second, the Matoaka, sailed from London on the 17th, with 303 statute adults. These were the first two vessels dispatched to New Zealand under the new regulations for providing emigrants with free passages to the Settlement.—The total number of emigrants who left the United Kingdom during the 30th of September was 27,496, which, when compared with the previous week's return, shows a decrease of 1613 souls. The majority sailed for the United States.

MUSIC.

On Saturday last Mr. Howard Glover gave a "grand festival concert" at Drury Lane, the first (as he has announced) of a series to be given fortnightly on Saturday afternoons. It was a very excellent concert, and attended with complete success. The programme included a great variety of well-selected music, executed by the most eminent performers now in town. Among the vocalists were Mdme. Parepa, Miss Louisa Pyne, Mdme. Weiss, Mdme. Florence Lancia, Miss Emily Soldene, Miss Stubbs, Mr. Perren, Mr. Lewis Thomas, Mr. Weiss, and Mr. G. Tedder. The instrumental solo performers were Mdlle. de Rocco on the piano, M. Lotto on the violin, and M. Lazarus on the clarinet, and Mr. Levy on the cornet-à-piston. There was, moreover, a large and complete orchestra, conducted in some pieces by the united hands of the Coldstream and Grenadier Guards. The concert derived a special interest from the performance of Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, which was illustrated by scenery and dramatic action on the stage. This, it will be remembered, produced a great effect at one of Mr. Gye's concerts last season, and on Saturday the repetition on that occasion was entirely successful. He announces that he intends to apply this mode of performance to Haydn's "Seven Words," to "Der Freischütz," to Mendelssohn's "Antigone," "Walpurgis Nacht," and Italian Symphony;" and to Handel's "Acis and Galatea"—an announcement which must excite the greatest curiosity and interest in the public. It is not necessary to enter into details as to the rest of the concert, the performers and the pieces performed being for the most part known to the public; but we must mention the successful début of a young and highly promising singer—Miss Emily Soldene, a pupil, we understand, of Mr. Glover's—who sang the finale to the "Cenerentola," "Non più mesta," in a style creditable to herself and her instructor.

Mr. Kennedy, the accomplished singer of Scottish music, is giving performances at the principal towns in the north country. From the accounts given of them in the local journals we observe that they everywhere obtain success, and are received with enthusiasm. Mr. Kennedy has established his reputation on both sides of the Tweed as the legitimate successor of the celebrated John Wilson, and when he is in no respect inferior, either in vocal excetition or in the power of giving the songs of Scotland their true character and expression. He sings those charming melodies with the utmost grace and simplicity, while his clear and emphatic elocution enables us "Southrons" easily to understand and appreciate the words in the verses. His singing, indeed, is a valuable lesson, showing the manner in which national songs and ballads ought to be delivered, whether they belong to Scotland or any other country. He enjoys also the great advantage of being aided by Mr. Land, the well-known friend and associate of Wilson, whose spirited and expressive accompaniments enhance the beauty and effect of the music.

The production of Meyerbeer's long-looked-for "Africaine," at the Paris Opera, may now be regarded in a short time. The principal characters are to be performed by Mdlle. Marie Sax, Mdlle. Marie Battu, M. Morelli, M. Merly, and M. Faure, most of whom are known to the English public. It is understood that they were selected by the lamented composer himself.

Gounod's opera "La Reine de Saba," which was produced before "Faust," but with much inferior success, is about to be reproduced in greatly abbreviated form.

It is said that Wagner's "Lohengrin" is to be brought forward at the Théâtre Lyrique. We are sorry to hear it; as the treatment of "Tannhauser," a few months ago, by a hostile claque, shows how much justice Wagner may expect from a Parisian audience.

The Moscow Italian Opera opened on Sept. 14, with the "Trovatore" in which Mdlle. Lagrua appeared in the part of the heroine. This lady, who has gained much favour at our Royal Italian Opera, was received by the Russian public with enthusiasm.

The sisters Eliott, the daughters of John Barnett, the author of "The Mountain Sylph," have "come on" with great success in Italy. They have appeared, at Bergamo, in Verdi's "Ballo in Maschera," and are engaged for the autumn season at Leghorn.

The Autographe gives a facsimile of the following sentence, written by Rossini in compliance with a request of Adelina Patti, that he would contribute something to her album:—"Di qualche cosa.—Di nulla.—Nothing can be more easy for me than to insert an idea in your album—an idea which I think of every moment. Only let the adorable creature, to admire your enchanting talent, and to be for ever your friend.—G. Rossini." The same artist may well be proud of such a compliment—so graceful and so deserved—from the greatest dramatic composer who has lived since the days of Mozart.

THE THEATRES.

The programme at Drury Lane is being punctually carried out, and the management has every reason to be confident of the public in respect to their intentions. On Saturday the "Second Part of Henry IV." was duly performed. Mr. Phelps appeared in the two characters of the dying Monarch and Mr. Justice Shallow, thus evincing the possession of very opposite powers. His declamation in the scene of the former was very impressive, and his drollery as senility in the famous Justice indisputably artistic. Mr. Barrett was the Falstaff, and acted with great care. Our readers here in this play is not the coward but the voluptuary; however, he is still the wit, and continues to be amusing. The play was remarkably well mounted.

A new comedy and a new actress were produced on Monday at the Haymarket. The occasion was interesting; for the new actress was an English girl who had played Parisian parts with success at the Odéon and Vaudeville theatres, and the new play had the imprimatur of Mrs. Frances Anne Kemble. The latter, however, was only an adaptation from the French play. "Adrienne Lecouvreur," by Belle Isle," already familiar to the British public under the title of "The Duke's Wager," is a work of the Scribe school. It has been taken other forms on the English stage, though it has never made a strong impression on any of them. Nevertheless, Mrs. Kemble Wentworth-made some alterations in the plot, with the evident purpose of removing prejudices, and has to some extent succeeded. She has converted the Abbé into the Duke de Bouillon, made the wife of the Duke de Richelieu, and thus the main event of the play resembles that of Shakspeare's "Much Ado About Nothing," in which Love's labour is won by the strong-minded Helena. This result is brought about by an adventure in which Mdlle. de Belle Isle is concerned, the betrothed of the Chevalier D'Aubigny (Mr. Barrett), who is not a little jealous of her movements. Mystery attaches to her conduct on occasion of a nocturnal complicity in the case of the supposed Marchioness de Valcour (Miss Louisa Angel) to recover her husband, the Duke de Richelieu (Mr. Ryder). The latter has laid a wager that he will obtain a midnight interview with Mdlle. de Belle Isle, and the Marchioness determines to take her place on the occasion. She therefore secures the services of the Abbé by promising him that evening to the Bastille, where her father is confined, while she herself conducts the Duke to the appointed scene. As the Duke claims to have won the wager. D'Aubigny, of course, suspects Mdlle. de Belle Isle; and, when it is proved that she has been false, cannot believe that he has really succeeded. Nothing then remains but that the young lover should challenge the Duke. But the duel is prevented by authority; and then D'Aubigny proposes the case to decide which shall commit suicide. The fatal lot falls to himself. The Duke, surprised by the arrival of the King in Paris with the Marchioness—who has confessed her intrigue to him—in order to rid himself of a political difficulty, before she have time to tell D'Aubigny he should survive, persuades the lover to leave Paris, and full explanations been made, the removal of the Duke de Bouillon from the ministry relieving her from the coil to conceal all that had happened on the night in question. Anon the Duke de Richelieu returns, and, confirming the truth of her statement, makes an apology to D'Aubigny. The heroine, who has thus unconsciously got into such serious trouble, was represented, as we have said, by a new actress, Mdlle. Beatrice, a young and beautiful woman, very graceful and intelligent, who spoke English tolerably well, though not without an accent, but with the unlimited power of avoiding sufficient to the exponent of emotion but not of passion. She, however, made the point in which she tells the Duke de Richelieu that "he lies" with sufficient force, but not with the subtlety and refinement with which Rachel used to give it. In other respects, her performance was marked with delicacy and pathos; and she will probably become the favourite of fashionable audiences.

At the Adelphi, which reopened on Monday for the winter season, a new actor of Hibernian parts was introduced. Mr. John Collins has gained in this line much celebrity in America. He has appeared as Sir Patrick O'Plenipo in "The Irish Ambassador," and as Teddy in "Teddy the Tiler." His performance was eminently satisfactory, for he is an accomplished actor, and his brogue is both genuine and rich. He sings well, and obtained genuine and encores in the songs of "The Bould Soger Boy," "The Low-backed Car," and "Wilkie Buchanan." He will do.

At the Surrey, a comedy, as it is called, was performed under the odd title of "Fast Friends up a Tree; or, How to Shave the Governor." Mr. Anderson, who is the author of the piece, and Mr. Fernandez were the fast friends. The dialogue of this comedy has been thought too broad; but it would seem that it was held too coarse for a too genuine audience. The incidents belong to farce, and provoke much laughter. The piece was acted with spirit, and the practised fun it contained fell in inevitable success.

At Astley's, also, an equivocal exhibition has taken place. Miss Adah Isaacs Menken appears as Mazeppa, and, as the playbills state, "delights her own countrymen and climbs higher precipices on horseback herself." The result is, however, a discreet compromise between the objectionable and the prudent; for, though the lady's figure is displayed on horseback, care has been taken that the rules of decency should not be too violently transgressed. Miss Menken as Menken is not without merit; she has a pretty face and a symmetrical form. But it is as an equestrienne that she must be judged; for even her agility consists principally of attitudes. She goes at full speed, and speaks. The spectacle in which she appears has been lavishly appointed; and with hundreds of supernumeraries, plenty of scenes and processions, some good scenery, and a numerous stud of horses, the manager will probably find the speculation profitable.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE King Tom had another field-day of it at Newmarket on Thursday, with Evelina, Furzechat, and Zephyr; and now that no "flying fillies" can be got to stay it, it is no wonder that his fifteen mares' subscription has filled as 72 to 20. Furzechat is a mare that is sure to see Reeve, Tomato, Hippolyta, and Evelina all following each other in the Rowley string. We hear that Mr. Blenkiron is in treaty with Dundee's stock, that he has purchased him for three thousand. Ignoramus and Zoyder Zee go abroad; and it was said at Newmarket that the president of "Comfy" the Batchian might be followed in Blair Athol's case, and that four or five were ready to pen down their names for half a leg of Blair Athol, whose sale price is said to be £8000. There seems a great feeling against letting this son of Blink Bonny go out of the country. Mr. Jackson bought him out of five of Captain Barlow's brood mares, and gave 320 gs. for the top lot, Wax by Surplice, a very fine mare with a colt by Oulston, and, we believe, a foal to him again. Currently, we may add, the sire to Mr. Jackson's Fairfield bore down during the next season. Lord Zetland has sent Cracker over to the Chickeys, where his brilliancy did so much good in old days, and whither Sir Walter Scott by Knight of Avenel has also journeyed.

At Manchester so short a price as 7 to 1 is taken about Liddington, and 16 to 1 about the dark Chieftain leading the derby. Longdown is occasionally inquired after, and seems pretty certainly destined to be "the finest big horse" since Wild Dayrell. On the strength of Dalmeister being in the trial, Gratitude is a favourite for the Cesarewitch, and if it is right it would seem to dispose of Carisbrook's chance. The mare, like the Calista colt, did not look like a stayer last year, and it will be odd if Tattoo comes round in that line of business after being always considered to like a mile best. Mail Train must also have undergone a considerable change if this is his sort of race: while Joco (7st. 21lb.) is an approved stayer and very nicely in, like Dr. Syntax (6st. 9lb.), Adventurer (7st.), if his legs only stand, should not be overlooked, as he is remarkably fresh, a quality which is specially served over this course.

The duke of Mr. Smith's Empress has brought together about a thousand spectators and buyers at Bristol on Thursday week. The "on view" the day before was as usual, quite a spectacle, as also had the bold foresters rode the "Bobbies" with all their stag-hunting nerve. The thirty averaged 424 a-piece, Chieftain leading the way at 40 gs. and Le Coq next at 39 gs. The foreigners were very much admired for colour—bay, with a few white hairs—and with fine action; altogether a good lot, barring that Chieftain, owing the price to a rumour he had been brought back a little too far. They, however, seemed harder in condition than the others. Amongst the countrymen were several noblemen, baronets, &c., and the lots were pretty equally diffused over England. Mr. Milward was there, from the Midlands, and bought four.

The Bridegroom blood began the coursing season well, as Beckford won the cup at Wolverhampton, and Bridegroom himself at Stakes at the Wigtownshire Club, where Mr. Warwick arrived, after judging at Audlem on the first day, and leaving Mr. Bennett to set in the second. Mr. Thomson came in late in the Great Western, and Mr. Terrife by Canadian, and own brother to King Death (who, like Patent and Rebe, is absent "The Two Wells" being the only ones coming watch), divided the Wigtownshire St. Leger with Mr. H. Broughton's Bungatoss and Beckford by Gaylad, Mr. Gavin Steele's pair of Seagulls, Sloe and Sourdock, went down in the first, and Mr. Borrow's Brigid Star and Beatrice (1) drawn lame in the second, round. There are 122 entries for the Great Western, and 85 in the Druid Stakes, and the Waterloo Cup will commence on Feb. 17.

We had that Mr. Waldron Hall has had a very good season for his otter-hounds near Edinburgh. The "fish-slice" disdained the water, and only once entered it for ten minutes in the course of a very sharp five miles through several large covers, and had to run into the open. One of the Eamont harriers held the line well with the black tan and the white tip brush, but the fox was finally used always to say that foxhounds and harriers will trained would make the best otter-hounds; and Dr. Hunt, of the Scotch Greys, has had a full proof of it, with his Malakhoff, Fairplay, and "Old John Peel."

The Emperor of Austria has issued an order of the day according to his son, the Archduke Francis Ferdinand, who has just won the Prussian Royal Order of the Black Eagle lately conferred upon him. The Prince is five years of age.

The Quebec Daily News says :—"It appears, from accounts received here, that destitution threatens to make its appearance during this winter. Efforts are being made in every direction to dispose of one of the provincial steamers with a supply of provisions, to be disposed of during the winter as the necessities of the people require. Petitions to this effect are making collections and sending donations of money and provisions."

The King has appointed Charles A. Sinclair, Esq., her Majesty's Consul at Chinkiang, to be her Majesty's Consul at Foo-Chow-Foo; Frederick Harvey, Esq., her Majesty's Consul at Ningpo, to be her Majesty's Consul at Chinkiang; William Henry Pittock, Esq., British Vice-Consul at Shanghai to be her Majesty's Consul at Ningpo; and Charles Alexander Preston Burton, her Majesty's Consul at Fernando Po, to be Britannic Consul at Lisbon. Mr. Charles Alexander Preston Burton has been also appointed Consul as Singapore for the Sultan; of Mr. B. Cramer as Consul at Belize for the King of Prussia; and of Lieutenant-Colonel Wallace Mark for the King of the Hellenes; and of Don Melon Tallaire y Bagés as Consul at Bombay for the Queen of Spain.

The Messager de Midi states that Baron de Rothschild possesses the most voluminous collection of topographical maps that any financier ever received. They form a complete series. Among the number is one lately addressed to the Baron containing the very tempting proposition that for the loquette of 90,000f. the writer would engage to show how he could prolong his life to the age of 150 years. The following is the Baron's reply :—"Sir,—It has frequently happened to me to be threatened with death if I did not give a sum of money. You are certainly the first that had ever acted me for 6 in proposing to prolong my life. Your proposition is, without doubt, far better and more humane. But my religion teaches me that we are all under the hand of God, and I will not do anything to withdraw myself from His decrees. My refusal, however, does not in any way affect your discovery, from which you will not fail, I hope, to profit yourself. Regretting that I cannot accede to your proposal, I sincerely congratulate you on the 150 years which you are called on to live in this world.—J. DE ROTHSCHILD."

W. D., Dublin.—1. The only makers, we believe, of the "Staunton" chessmen are Messrs. Jaques, ivory-turners, of Hatton-garden, London. 2. "The Chessplayer's Handbook." K. P.—1. A letter appears to have dropped in the first game of our Number for Sept. 24. Black's 3rd move should be P to Q B 4th, and not P to K B 4th. 2. We have not received either the work or the problem. In the first move of Black's game of 3rd Sept., the same scribe last mentioned, this move, as originally set up in type, was "P to K takes Q P." But in the typical action of the machine printing the "P" dropped out. Again, in the same game, Blacks 33 moves stood at first, "33. Kt to Q Kt 4th;" but the "Q" and "Kt" were also accidentally omitted in the printing. Inadvertency may sometimes be taken to prevent form, but they cannot be accepted.

NEREUS.—Your proposed solution of No. 1072—1. Kt to Q Kt 6th, &c.—is unexceptionable, and it was right, therefore, marked as such.

H. PEAU, of Leeds.—The first of your problems is an impossible position. How can a Black Pawn be at Q Kt 2nd when the K Kt Pawn has not been moved? The second letter is right.

ZAMORA.—No. 36, of your recent missive, apparently, of the following solution, in three :—1. Q to K 3rd or 1 Kt to K 5th, &c., and many more moves. No. 11 is decidedly good, requiring the solution to be 1. Q to K 6 th ; 2. Kt takes B, &c.

THE FRANCO-ROMAN QUESTION.

In modern times despotism, no less than constitutionalism, works by special means to its ends. The acts of the veriest autocrat are no longer ebullitions of a strong and free will, but the result of a policy. A ukase may be, and probably often is, a carefully prepared State-paper, which, if it does not give reasons for its mandate, shows evidence that it has been founded on a nice adaptation of the idea in which it originates to the power which is to carry it out. What are apparently the most absolute and sudden decrees are probably the slow creation of years, and produced only at that moment of projection which is made up of opportunity and the fitness of things. We venture to think that these axioms are peculiarly applicable to the recent step of the Emperor of the French which is known as the Franco-Italian Convention. Whatever may have been the motives and the policy which led the President of the French Republic to occupy Rome with his troops in 1848, it is scarcely to be doubted that in the plan which the Emperor formed for the unity of Italy, and which was acted upon in the campaign of 1859, the withdrawal of his forces from the Eternal City and its erection into the capital of the new kingdom were included. The consistency of the Emperor's views and intentions on the Roman question has been doubted, and in this regard he has been accused of lack of design and variation of policy; but, however action may have been delayed in this matter, a fair examination of all that Louis Napoleon has said and written on the subject in the last five or six years tends to prove that his opinion was uniform, but that, all powerful as he nominally was, responsible in theory to none but himself, he was yet bound by those inscrutable laws which yet govern human affairs, and by which the most absolute Sovereigns are influenced in their degree as much as the rest of mankind. For many reasons, some occult and some obvious, the stroke of the pen which sciolists in politics and diplomacy supposed could at any time have settled the point in question was suspended and the issue left to the slow operation of opinion and of time.

The terms of the Convention itself go far to evince that even the closet of the most free-thinking, the firmest, and the most individualised absolute ruler that perhaps ever lived, may have about it some of the features of a circumlocution office. Although it appears that the Emperor believes that the time has arrived when he may move in the Romish question, even he does not venture to go direct to the object which he must ultimately have in view—namely, the erection of Rome into the metropolis of the kingdom of Italy, and, by consequence, the termination of the temporal power of the Pope. By the first article of the Convention, the King of Italy undertakes not to attack the present territory of the Pope, and to prevent any attack from being made upon it from without. This places the protection of the Pope and his dominions practically under the protection of the King of Italy; for as, by the next article, the withdrawal of the French troops is guaranteed positively within two years, if the condition that an independent Papal army sufficient to maintain the authority of the Pope and tranquillity, both at home and on the frontier, should prove a nullity owing to the impossibility of raising such a force, the duty which that army would have performed must be undertaken by Victor Emmanuel under the exigency of the first article. The evacuation of Rome by the French troops is a sine qud non; the defence of the Pope by the King of Italy is another; and if there be no Pontifical army to defend the Pope from the dangers to which it is assumed he will be exposed, the inference is obvious and inevitable—his body-guard will be Piedmontese soldiers. A very slight stretch of imagination will enable any one to figure to himself a situation akin to that of 1848: the Roman people in revolt; Garibaldi, or some one representing the idea of Italian unity, the key-stone of which is Rome for a capital, at their head; and the foe which Italian patriots will meet when they march upon the city being Italian soldiers, who are what they are because they have fought for Italian liberty and the consolidation of their country into one constitutional kingdom. It seems hardly necessary to indicate the probable, nay the inevitable, result. In point of fact, if the Convention means anything, it resolves itself into a notice to the temporal power of the Pontiff at two years' date.

However indirectly and in whatever terms we phrase the Convention and its commentary, as conveyed in the despatch of M. Drouyn de Lhuys to the French Ambassador at the Vatican, might be worded, to something like this issue they must come at last. The deduction may not be broadly set down, or stated in plain and unambiguous terms; but the reasoning, the arguments, the conclusion of the case leave no alternative as to its meaning. The grounds on which the withdrawal of the French troops have been decided are undeniably strong and pertinent. The embarrassments and complications which have arisen out of the occupation are set down in all their forms and bearings; the efforts which have been made, but in vain, to mitigate the difficulties and anomalies of the situation are elaborately exhibited; and the ratiocination is logically complete in the announcement of the impossibility of the continuance of such an unbearable state of things. Not amongst the least significant of the articles of the Convention is that which operates to transfer the seat of the Italian Government from Turin to Florence. Upon the very face of it, it is a purely provisional arrangement, as it is, as it were, a move towards Rome, a lessening of the distance which the Executive and the Legislative will have to traverse when their final migration to the centre of Italy takes place. It cannot but occur to the mind of many, that the term which is fixed for the continuance of the Papal power in Rome has within it a personal ingredient; that is, that it has reference to the individual tenure of power by the present Pope. It has been often said that the moment of the demise of the existing Pontiff would be that of a decided change in the policy of France on the subject of the temporal rights of the Roman See. But, dealing with national questions, politicians and diplomatists are as calmly calculating with regard to human life as ever insurance offices can be; and, however unpleasant it may be to dwell on an idea of such delicacy, it is difficult to dissbuse oneself of the feeling that in the consideration of the terms and the consideration of the probable events on which the Convention was based, some weight may have been accorded to the likelihood of the circumstance that two years hence there would be less of personal feeling to consult and less individual habitude to distract in the settlement of the Roman question, than now, when the temporal Sovereign, with whom the masters of the situation would have to deal, would be one who, as a man, would appeal so strongly to the gentler sympathies, even of the most devoted adherent of Italian unity.

We have above hinted at an eventuality arising out of this Convention which would be rude and, so to speak, physically forcible in its character. The possibility of the Roman people themselves finally settling that part of the Italian question in which they have a special interest has been intimated. No doubt that is one view of the case, and one which ought not to be left wholly out of contemplation; but it is by no means to be adopted as the only view. We have unlimited faith in the operation of Constitutional freedom in Italy as distinguished from armed revolution at Rome. The influence of free institutions is working on the character of the Italian people. The guarantees which they have acquired for the supremacy of the popular will, as it is founded upon rights, will assuredly contribute to the calmness of the popular spirit and to the dignity of the popular action. If the terms of the Convention be literally carried out, it may safely be predicted that the Romans will be able to make good their claims to that freedom which the great bulk of their countrymen already enjoy; and this by the moral force of opinion rather than by the rude instrumentality of the sword. They may well be content to leave that the period of their deliverance has been practically measured—that the date of an epoch in their history has been actually fixed—and that during the next two years no overt act of theirs will be necessary towards the attainment of the end which they have at heart. It is not a violent supposition that no mind is more fully made up as to the length of time to which the continuance of the temporal power of the Pope is to be prolonged than the Cardinal Secretary of State, who has been deemed the main supporter of that Power.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

The departure of the Court for Compiègne is postponed. The Pays announces that the Emperor and Empress will remain at St. Cloud till the end of the month.

The following diplomatic appointments have been made:—M. Benedetti as Ambassador to Berlin, Baron de Thayenau to St. Petersburg, M. Mercier to Madrid. M. Bourrée has been appointed French Minister at Athens, M. Colonna at Athens, M. Bonaly at the Court of the Elector of Hesse, M. Gros at Frankfort, M. Chateauneuf at Washington, and Count Messignan to Teheran.

A batch of new Senators has been made, among whom figure Count Nieuwerkerke and the Archbishop of Paris.

M. Drouyn de Lhuys is understood to have written a circular to the French agents abroad, pointing out the urgent necessity for arriving at a settlement of the Roman question, and arguing that the mode of attaining the object sought by the Convention consists in it all that can be desired by the Pope on the one hand and by Italy on the other. The Patrie publishes a letter from Petersburg, stating that the Russian Government had given its adhesion to the French policy in the Roman question.

The Duke de Persigny has been replying to the journals which criticised the theories of liberty promulgated in his recent speech at St. Etienne. The reply of the Duke is couched in one of those convenient letters to friends which statesmen write when they are anxious to publish something, and do not choose to address it directly to the newspapers.

The following circular has been issued by the French Minister of Public Instruction :—" Monsieur le Recteur,—By virtue of a decree dated 13th August, the young Poles compelled by recent events to leave certain parts of the Austrian empire have been placed on the list of the French colleges. You are requested to forward to me all demands for scholarships which may be addressed to you from them."

The iron-plated frigate Savoie has been successfully launched at Toulon. The Savoie, built according to a plan prepared by M. Dupuy de Lome, measures, without her sheathing, 269ft. in length by 57ft. in width. Her draught of water is 26ft. 2in. when fully laden. She will carry thirty-eight guns and a crew of 560 men. There remains on the stocks at Toulon another iron-plated. frigate, to be called the Magenta, which will be of the Provence and the Flandre, already at sea, form the complement of iron-cased vessels to be built in the Toulon dockyard.

The Princess Amelia, widow of Count de Mdne, the Duwager de Caylay. of her residence the Château du Renouard, near Vimoutiers (Orne), in her eighty-fifth year. She was long born on the 30th of November, 1775. The deceased was of the same family as Charlotte Corday, the Norman heroine, being a distant cousin. Though ten years younger than Napoleon I., she was his friend, and always spoke of her " as a young person usually serious and reserved, having the manners of a lady. She loved little children, and was fond of the royal children of the family, but who could laugh on occasion, was very fond of children, and loved to promote their amusement."

Three victories have been gained by the French over the insurgents in Algeria. News has been received in Paris of the spread of the insurrection in the province of Constantine, but nothing has yet been heard of the final summons to a holy war.

The Emperor of Morocco had ordered the Tangiers Custom House to pay the indemnity of 125,000f. (£5000) claimed by France for the assassination of a French subject.

SPAIN.

Monday being the anniversary of the Queen's birthday a reception was held at the palace, and a review took place. All officers of the army and navy in Madrid attended.

The Epoca states that Senor Mon has been appointed Ambassador at Paris, and Senor Pacheco Ambassador at Rome.

Admiral Topete has arrived at Madrid. He is convalescent.

The Minister of Finance is unable to effect any credit operation under the existing circumstances. The Government awaits the result of the deliberations of the new Chambers.

Advices received from Havannah report that negotiations are progressing at San Domingo for the settlement of the rebellion in that island.

The Noticias says that at a council of Ministers, held on Thursday week, the recall of Admiral Pinzon from Peru was decided upon. Admiral Topete is charged for the Penne command and destination of the Pacific squadron.

ITALY.

The Marquis Pepoli, the principal author of the Franco-Italian Convention, at a banquet recently given in his honour by the people of Milan, delivered a speech vindicating the Convention as the work of Italy, a boon to civilisation, and the rupture of the last link which bound France to the enemies of Italian independence. The Marquis Pepoli concluded by drinking to the union of Italy with the worthy remnants of new cessions sought by France or to be made by Italy.

Some of the Paris papers, the France and the Patrie in particular, assert that the Roman question is now beginning to prevail, and deny that the Pope will refuse to reorganise his army.

Telegrams from Rome assert that at the meetings of the Cardinals held yesterday and the day of last month only ecclesiastical affairs have been made the subject of discussion.

AUSTRIA.

The fête of the dedication of the Emperor was celebrated on the 4th inst. in all the churches of the capital, which were filled with crowded congregations. Most of the Archdukes were present at the Te Deum performed in the cathedral on the occasion.

The Archduchess Maria Theresa, who has just been betrothed to Duke Philip of Wurtemberg, is the daughter of the Archduke Albert.

It is declared that the reduction of the Austrian army is positively about to be carried out. In Venetia alone the reduction will amount to 15,000 men. This would indicate that Austria does not regard the Franco-Italian Convention as likely to lead to war.

PRUSSIA.

We hear from Berlin that the King, upon his return to that capital, will visit Hanover and Hesse-Cassel, Nassau, and Frankfort. The Emperor of Russia will visit Berlin on his return to St. Petersburg at the commencement of November.

The Grand Duchies of Saxonia, Wirtemberg, Hesse Darmstadt, and Nassau join the reconstituted Zollverein have been signed to-day.

The marriage of the eldest daughter of the Prince Royal of Prussia will take place on the 18th, the anniversary of the birthday of the Prince Royal, his father. After the ceremony, the Princess, it is said, will proceed to the south of France, a residence have being considered necessary for her health.

DENMARK AND GERMANY.

It was announced on Saturday, at Copenhagen, that the conclusion of peace is near at hand, as the Danish Cabinet has consented to fix the Danish frontier, or about £1,100,000, the share which Schleswig and Holstein are to be allowed in the public property of Denmark; and that sum will, consequently, be deducted from the amount of the Danish debt to be borne by the duchies. A telegram from Vienna strengthens this impression. It states that all the serious difficulties have been overcome, and that the Conference Royal of Prussia will take precedence of the Diet.

The Berlingske Tidende contains a very distressing account of the hardships to which the people of Jutland are subjected by the array of occupation.

AMERICA.

We have news from New York to the 1st inst.

The quietude about Petersburg has been broken. It is announced that General Grant's army had undertaken important operations both on the north and south banks of the James River, though their scope and result are not yet very clear. It appears from Grant's report that, on the morning of the 29th ult., General Ord's Federal corps advanced and carried the strong fortifications of Chepin's Farm, in which he took fifteen guns and 200 prisoners. At the same time another Federal division moved from Deep Bottom and carried the intrenchments which defended the Newmarket Road, scattering the enemy and taking a few prisoners. This division afterwards advanced towards Richmond, and arrived at a place called Junction Hill. In a subsequent report, apparently forwarded on the evening of the 30th ult., General Grant stated that the operations on the north side of the James River were successful. He added that there was no movement on the south bank, that on the 30th ult. General Warren's corps carried the enemy's line on the right, and was following up its successes; and that General Meade had moved from the left and centre of the enemy's lines near Poplar Grove, while General Butler had repulsed an attack on his lines.

General Sheridan had reported, apparently on the 23rd ult., that he had pursued the defeated Confederates to Port Republic; that his cavalry had destroyed much railroad property at Staunton and Waynesborough, on the Charlottesville Railway; and that General Early's army was said to be demoralised. No official accounts later than the 25th ult. had been received from him, as Confederate guerrillas in his rear had captured his couriers—a strange position for a conquering army to be in. But the Richmond papers admitted that on the 26th ult. General Sheridan unsuccessfully attacked General Early at Brown's Gap, and that General Early then reassumed the offensive, and drove the Federals back six miles to Port Republic, and, it was believed, across the Shenandoah river.

The position of General Sherman at Atlanta does not appear to be quite secure. A brigade under General Martin had torn up the railway track between Dalton and Atlanta, while General Forrest had taken the Federal garrison at Athens, had destroyed the railroad between Decatur and Athens, had destroyed two railway trains on the Nashville and Chattanooga railroad, and had done more or less damage on various parts of that railway. But it is said that the effect of these operations "felt no apprehension concerning General Sherman's communications." Secretary Stanton has issued a circular urging the people to promote enlistments in order that General Sherman might be enabled to hold Atlanta and to advance further south. General Hood was reinforced towards the Atlanta line. The Southern papers state that Beauregard had been appointed to the command of the Confederate armies, while General Forrest had taken peace negotiations in that State are renewed. It is said the Governor of that State had tendered to Sherman propositions of peace, and that that General had sent a favourable reply to the civil State authorities. A Washington telegram of the 29th ult. says :—" After careful inquiry, it cannot be ascertained that any propositions are attached in official circles to the rumoured peace propositions from Georgia." A meeting was then raging between Generals Hood and Sherman respecting the expulsion of the latter of the citizens of Atlanta.

The Confederate General Price, who was aided by Generals Kirby Smith and Shelby, had invaded the State of Missouri at the head of forces estimated at 30,000 men, and had advanced as far as the town of Potosi. The invasion had caused great alarm at St. Louis, where the Federal authorities were preparing for the defence of the city; and General Rosecrans had issued a proclamation calling the militia people to arms, and had succeeded in raising 12,000 Missourian militia.

General Price was then said to be concentrating his forces at Ironton.

President Jefferson Davis, in a speech made by him at Salisbury, in North Carolina, declared that, although reverses had been experienced by the Confederates, the spirit of the country was unbroken, and that he would yet wring peace and independence from a hated foe. He urged all Southern men to join the army, and all young women not to marry no man who shirked the duties of a soldier.

A mass meeting of Democrats in favour of peace had been held at New York. General Sully is reported to have defeated the allied Indian force of 6000 warriors in a desperate battle in Nebraska, inflicting upon them terrible punishment.

After violent fluctuations, gold was quoted on the 1st inst. at 2½ premium, the rate showing a decline from previous prices. At one time the premium was as low as 83.

NEW ZEALAND.

The war seems to be at an end. Some of the insurgent tribes—for it is not clear that all have surrendered—have made their submission to the British Government. A telegram was received at the Foreign Office on Wednesday morning by Lord Caledon Duncan Hamilton, stating took place, on the 5th and 6th of August, between the Governor of the colony and the chiefs of Tauranga, at which the latter submitted, unconditionally, to the Queen's authority, and placed their lands at the Governor's disposal. The natives have been permitted to retain their lands, except a small portion, which will be forfeited.

The twenty-seventh annual meeting of the Leominster Agricultural Society was held, at Leominster, yesterday week. The show of stock was small, attributed to the scarcity of fodder, and, except in horses, of a very inferior quality. In the evening there was the usual dinner, at which the president, Mr. Richardson, took the chair; and there were present Lord Bateman, the Hon. Cecil Hanbury Lennox, M.P., Mr. Gathorne Hardy, M.P., and Mr. Clive.

The third annual ploughing-match and dinner in connection with the Cheshire Agricultural Society took place at Moulton, on Monday week. The weather was exceedingly fine and the attendance numerous. The show was held on a building site in a field adjoining the Pole Arms Inn. The chair was taken by the president of the association, J. L. Scarbrough, Esq. Sir Lawrence Peel was the judge. The prizes were for the best ploughmen of the county, were among those who took part in the proceedings.

The twenty-first annual exhibition of stock under the auspices of the Cannock Agricultural Society took place, on Monday, in a field adjoining the Crown Inn, Cannock, where also by the prizes were offered by the association were competed for. The ploughing-matches took place in a field at the Kingswood Farm, tenanted by Mr. George Allen. The ploughing was, as a whole, was not equal to the average of former years, but some few animals were shown which were the pride of the district, and commended by the judges. The annual dinner afterwards took place at the Crown Inn. Lord Lichfield presided, and Mr. C. Chesshyre occupied the vice-chair. The chairman, in proposing "Success to the Cannock Agricultural Association," dwelt at some length on the objects the society had in view, and referred to a portion of the agricultural country, and remarked that to make the society successful in a very considerable degree. With the knowledge of the circumstance, it was the duty of landlords, wherever the change was necessary, to see how it could be effected consistently with the interests of all parties.

The Royal Bute Berks Agricultural Association, which is one of the most recent of the kind, held its annual meeting and ploughing-match on Thursday week. The ploughmatch took place on land belonging to Farm, Coalsden, in the occupation of Mr. J. T. Mills. Between thirty and forty teams competed. The ploughing was not quite so good as on some former occasions, it has sometimes been in former years. In the evening there was a public dinner at the Townhall, Maidenhead. The chair was taken by Mr. John Henry, the vice-president being Mr. Walter, M.P.

On the death of Father Mathew, in 1856, a committee of the citizens of Cork, of which Father Matthew was a member, was formed for the purpose of raising a monument to his memory in Cork. The funds were raised, and the commission for the statue was given to Hugh Lane, Irish sculptor, whose death retarded the carrying out of the work. A commission was then given to Mr. Foley, R.A., the model of which has been produced by Mr. Foley, having been raised in Cork, was unveiled on Monday, with great ceremony, in the presence of an enthusiastic assembly of from ten to fifteen thousand persons. The statue—which is of bronze, and eight feet high—stands upon a pedestal nine feet six inches in height. The inscriptions, which are at present only temporarily affixed, are to be on bronze scrolls, and are as follow :— "Matthew, Apostle of Temperance." On the front of the block :—"The tribute of a grateful people." On the back :—"Erected in the mayoralty of John Francis Maguire, M.P., 1864." On the two sides are placed fresh-water fountains. The site, which was selected by Mr. Foley, is at the top of Patrick-street, and close to Patrick's Bridge, which the statue faces. The principal features of the day's proceedings was a procession, in which their numbers and imposing character took the form of a demonstration in favour of temperance principles, headed by the Mayor, the members of the Corporation, and the different Temperance Societies. The most eloquent eulogy of the deceased, which was enthusiastically received, and the proceedings were brought to a close in the most satisfactory manner. An engraving of the statue has appeared in this Journal.

The first turf of the West Norfolk Junction Railway was turned on Friday last, on Saturday bun, by Mr. Benjamin Simpson, engineer of Mr. Lightly Simpson, chairman of the West Norfolk Junction Railway. After the ceremony the company and a party of gentry went by train to Hunstanton, where a champagne luncheon was provided for 200. The projected line will be eighteen miles in length, affording a direct communication with Norwich, and is to be made at a cost of £37,000.

Sir Charles Young, Garter King of Arms, with his assistants, was engaged, yesterday morning, at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, in taking down the banners, swords, helmets, and other insignia of the two deceased Knights of the Garter—viz., the late Duke of Somerset and the late Duke of Normanby—and placing the insignia of the Duke of Sutherland and the Marquis of Ailesbury over their respective stalls. Several alterations were also made in the arrangement of the regalia of the other knights.

The Earl Chancellor has appointed Mr. James Stephen, of the Middle Temple, barrister-at-law, to be a Registrar of the Court of Bankruptcy for the Liverpool district, in the room of Mr. Samuel Payne, who retires on account of age and infirmity, after a service of upwards of twenty years. Mr. Stephen is the eldest son of Sir James Stephen, late Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, and Professor of English Law and Jurisprudence at King's College, and is also Recorder of Poole. He is, of course, eligible for the office of Registrar of Bankruptcy.

The Devon and Somerset Railway, which is forty-two miles in length, and is to connect Taunton and Barnstaple, passing by Bamptonton, Dulverton, and Exford, began at Taunton on Thursday last, and the first turf in the presence of a large concourse of persons. The field in which the ceremony took place was the property of a member of the firm of Beckington, and was tastefully decorated for the occasion, temporary erections of which were by Messrs. Bryant and May, of Bridgewater, and Mr. Jones. The town was ornamented by a large display of banners and some triumphal arches. The first sod was cut by Mr. Gibbs, of the Market-cross property, and turned over by Lord Portsmouth.

Mr. Edmund Street, of the Elms, Birmingham, has in his possession the largest copper idol ever brought to this country. It is no less a personage than the god Buddha, supposed to be a native of Bengal. Discovered on the lower rooms of his temple, where he had been hidden some 200 years ago, he is now in a sitting posture, 4 ft. 6 in. high, and composed of copper and bronze castings. We believe (says the Birmingham Post) that it is Mr. Thornton's intention to present the image to the town, and it will probably be deposited in the Midland Institute. The figure, after a lapse of 2200 years, Buddha will be worshipped once more in the land of his birth. Probably not the first turf in the presence of a large concourse of persons. Improvements similar to those effected on the Calton Hill last year, which have so much improved the appearance of that spot, are continued this season. The Scotsman says that a new substantial wall has been erected round the whole of the breaking Ground, with ornamental railings and several other alterations have been effected, which have added considerably to the beauty of that locality. Permission has been granted for completing surrounding the national monument but long been considered a drawback to the beauty of the hill, and various schemes have from time to time been made to have it removed. Difficulties have hitherto stood in the way; but these have now been removed, and it is to be hoped that the unsightly thing which so much offended the eye will be taken down, and the massive Hough Doric columns which form the inclosure be displayed in their pleasing and picturesque proportions. An arrangement has been agreed upon between the Board of Works and the proprietors, and within the next few months will elapse before the proposed plan can be fully carried out. A considerable outlay will be required for the completion of each side of M'Kenzie's Monument has been pulled down ; the small wooden shed or cottage, within the portico, has been removed, and the ground around it levelled, and a neat border of grass turf placed along the edge of the footpath. The effect of these alterations is decidedly pleasing.

The members of the Sussex Archæological Society held their annual meeting at Lewes on Tuesday, when a paper was read relative to the remaining Roman village of Anderiget and its neighbourhood as connected with Roman roads, by Mr. Roach Smith. The district, although not perhaps so rich in archæological treasures, possesses great natural beauty and is highly favoured with Roman roads, which intersect it in every direction. A considerable excursion was engaged by the whole company. There was a goodly muster of the members of the Society and a large company of whom came from distant parts of the county. The point of rendezvous was Hayward's-heath station of the Brighton line, whence the party proceeded in carriages to the first station for the conveyance of the party in their archæological tour. One of the objects of interest to which circumstances in the course of their long progressions was an old Roman road which passes through a portion of the parish, and which, although it was ploughed up, was plainly discernible. The church was likewise visited. It is a very ancient and interesting structure, containing several objects of archæological interest, a low square tower and five bells. The architecture of the building is strictly Gothic in character, and the register dates back to the year 1538. Cuckfield Church, a fine specimen of the norrel edifice was made by the party, and the leading features were pointed out by local gentlemen. Cuckfield Church then paid a visit to the family seat of the Culepepers, at Wakehurst Place, and a number also visited the ruins of Slaugham Old College, the lower part of which was built at the erection at Ardingly, in connection with St. Nicholas College, Lancing.

The serious fire that occurs in the promotion of the objects of the Working Men's Club and Institute has been the cause of a stir in Manchester and Lancashire and in the Birmingham district. During the past week Mr. Solly addressed meetings at Nottingham and Scarborough, their experiences of the working of the movement is indeed spreading over a very large area of the country. The meeting at Scarborough was held in the Spa Concert Room, and was addressed by Mr. Solly, Mr. Hole, and several gentlemen who take an active interest in the welfare of the labouring classes in that locality. Models have been provided with commodious premises, fitted up as reading, lecture, conversation and smoking rooms, and in which a supply of refreshments can be obtained at a penalise, the rent price. The reading-room will be supplied with the London daily papers, magazines, &c. A spacious gymnasium is also provided, and the materials for chess and draughts. The opening was celebrated last Saturday evening by a tea-party at the Institute, Great Ancoats-street. There was a numerous attendance of working men and their wives. The chair was occupied by the Mayor of Manchester, who addressed the meeting. Addresses were also delivered by Messrs. Townsend, Thompson, Cooper, Edwards, Hall, and Lloyd Jones. The proceedings were interspersed by recitations and music, and closed with a vote of thanks to the Mayor for presiding. A similar meeting was held at Birmingham, on Tuesday evening, the Mayor in the chair ; it was determined to organise an exhibition to be called "The Working Men's Industrial Exhibition for Birmingham and the District."

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER AT BOLTON.

MR. GLADSTONE visited Bolton on Tuesday afternoon. In honour of the occasion, the chief streets of the town were decorated with flags and streamers of every colour and device. He was met at the railway station by the Mayor and Town Clerk, Captain Gray, M.P., Mr. Barnes, M.P., and Mr. Alderman Harwood, chairman of committee. The party, in three carriages, proceeded down Lever-street, Bridge-street, Market, and Deansgate, to Mount St. George's, where Mr. Gladstone was received with great enthusiasm. The Temperance Hall was selected for this public reception from its great capaciousness, being capable of holding about 2000 people. The hall was full, and many had been turned away.

Mayor (Mr. Harwood), in introducing the right hon. gentleman to the meeting, said he was very glad to welcome him to Bolton.—No words of mine are needed on this occasion. You'll only say that this is a proud day for Bolton, but I may say that it is a proud day for the whole country. In every part of England, where deeds have made him famous through the length and breadth of the land, from Hawarden (Cheers). The Town Clerk will now read an address which I have to present to the Chancellor ; and Mr. Grimshaw presented to him an address which was read.—(Loud cheers.) Mr. Gladstone, on rising, was received with loud and long-continued applause. Each address was indorsed by the frequent applause of the audience. He said—Mr. Mayor, Ladies and Gentlemen, I thank the Corporation for the cordial manner in which they have addressed me.

Mr. Mayor, Ladies, and Gentlemen,—I will not at all affect to underrate the honour of the position which I have refrained to-day to the town of Bolton. I must, however, state that it was on my part entirely unsolicited, and I will further say that I should not have consented to receive it from the municipal body that I should be kindly welcomed among you ; and, moreover, I will further say that I felt a confidence, sustained by the large experience of members of the Government in every part of the country, that the general feeling existing in this place would be favourable to the measures which I have to show that the public rely upon those by whom the laws are made and administered (Cheers). Gentlemen, I am immediately after this meeting about to address a large body of my constituents. Each address was indorsed by the frequent would excite entertainment in some portions of the world, when the thousands and tens of thousands of every man within the borders of the Chancellor are to be engaged, as we have seen to-day, and as has been seen on other occasions by many hundreds of persons here, to testify, as it were, on a mass by their personal welcome to those who are engaged in carrying on the Government, I believe, that there is no more important guarantee for the community, but it is a sight full of meaning ; and he assured that I do not overrate the importance of it when I say that I value your address and your welcome in this sense. I know very well that I am receiving, in testimonies of your confidence, a reward which belongs to the labours of my colleagues. I am quite aware that it is those who were pioneers in the field of useful legislation to whom the greatest honour is due. I am aware that I am only one of the humblest among all the labourers in that cause, and not one of the most distinguished. But, gentlemen, I am receiving from you what I value much as it is due to secondary abilities and to a secondary part, but yet a part taken in a cause which is the cause of the whole country. I believe that a alteration brought about in the relations of classes in this country such as must make the interests of every man who wishes for the public welfare to be seen mistrust and alienation gradually fading away like mists before the rising sun ; and I believe, too, in the existence of a spirit of fairness throughout all classes of the community sentiments of mutual confidence, which have been shown by the eagerness in the social relations of classes (Cheers). Believe me, I can appreciate that generosity of the English character which has led you to receive me with so much kindness. There is one thing, and with which they have shown themselves so ready to acknowledge the efforts of the Government (Cheers).

The changes we have seen within the last twenty or twenty-five years, I say, are very great, and I am sometimes disposed to think that we are apt to forget that perhaps we cannot expect anything precisely similar to recur. It is not possible that the same circumstances which led to those changes can be enabled by their puny exertions, under the direction of an all-wise Providence, to do the same thing over again. But, gentlemen, I think that a review of the unmixed as the good which has been done in England within our recollection by the classes who have been engaged in carrying on the Government, when we see parties violently at issue, and principles keenly contested, the action of the Government has been such as to command the confidence of all, to whom Lancashire has given birth, and whose exertions she animated and encouraged (Cheers). I do not mean to say unanimously—unanimity is mainly due (Cheers). It is impossible for me not to refer to the short experience I have had of the duties of the office which I have the honour to hold, to witness the growth of institutions among you ; all of which are a testimony to the spirit of the people, and not by any means to the action of the State in a rational and monastic part, that he is born for the future more than for the present time. And now, gentlemen, I am about to address a body of my constituents, and under this condition,—it looks towards and prepares to meet it before I go.

I rejoice to see the Reform Bill of Parliament, passed at the instance of Mr. Ewart, for the foundation of free public libraries, and I rejoice to see that it is being put into operation. Enough, has been appreciated by the whole body of the community, and has proved to be a boon which is highly valued by the people, and which they are willing to use and to possess (Cheers). I am delighted to hear that the Government has been so successful in the matter of the Museum, and I am also exceedingly glad to find that the Government has been

THE EXPLOSION OF A GUNPOWDER MAGAZINE AT ERITH.

We present three more Illustrations of the destructive explosion at the Belvedere powder-magazines, near Erith, on Saturday morning, the 1st inst. Our Engravings represent the appearance of the ruins, and of the site occupied by the magazines and the cottages which were destroyed. One of these Views, that of the remains of the house of Walter Silver, foreman in the service of the Low Wood Company, is engraved after a photograph taken with the newly-invented panoramic camera by the "London Pantascopic Company," of Red Lion-square. The smaller Engraving, from a sketch by our own Artist, shows what is left of the house of George Mayer, storekeeper to the magazine of Messrs. John Hall and Sons. Our third Illustration gives a general view, taken from the embankment looking down the river, a few hours after the explosion. It was stated in our last that the inquest opened by Mr. Carttar, one of the Coroners for the county of Kent, to investigate the causes of this disaster, had been adjourned for a week. Another inquest has been held at Guy's Hospital, by Mr. Serjeant Payne, Coroner for the city of London, upon the bodies of two persons who died in the hospital of the injuries which they received at Belvedere. Two of the Messrs. Hall, with Mr. Monk, the manager of their powder-mills at Faversham, attended this inquest. From the evidence of Mr. William Hall it appeared that the barges, which had brought gunpowder from the mills at Faversham, were lying at the jetty belonging to their magazine at Belvedere when the explosion took place; and it is supposed that one of them was unloading at that moment. The manner of doing it was by handing the barrels, separately, out of the barges and placing them on a truck, which was drawn by hand along a wooden tramway to the magazine, one barrel at a time. Such were the precautions against a spark or a flash arising from friction, that the wheels of the trucks were of gun-metal, and the nails in the wooden tramway of copper; while the barrels were rolled on leather hides, and each barrel had been twice carefully examined to see that it was perfectly tight. No lighting of candles or smoking was allowed either in the magazine or on board the barges; cooking was only allowed on board when the barges were conveying saltpetre or brimstone from London to Faversham, but not when they were carrying gunpowder from the mills to the magazines; on which occasion the bargemen had to bring their food from home ready cooked, though the trip might take them a week. There was a fireplace in the cabin of the barge, and the cabin was separated from the hold by a wooden partition, the cabin side of which was lined with lead. It was stated that the bargemen were all of good character, steady, and sober. Neither Mr. Hall nor Mr. Monk would give any opinion as to the cause of the explosion. The falling of a cask would not produce fire unless it fell on powder. The jury found a verdict declaring that the two persons who died at the hospital were killed by the explosion of gunpowder, but how that explosion originated there was no evidence to show. The jury, however, were of opinion "that the practice of allowing stoves or lights of any description on board the gunpowder barges should be discontinued."

THE EXPLOSION OF A GUNPOWDER MAGAZINE NEAR ERITH: RUINS OF RAYNER'S HOUSE.

FRENCH AND ENGLISH WATERING-PLACES.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Post, who has recently passed from Biarritz to Scarborough, makes a comparison between the two, as well of the people who frequent them.

He writes thus of Biarritz:—"The great ladies of France and Spain make holiday with a graceful abandon in dress, or ten costumes, for the part. They are free to laugh and rollick. They are not slave donkey-riding. They don't parade before the sea, with stately steps and set features. They don't sit, in calm and silent rows, round an al fresco orchestra, listening to the airs with which London organs have made every groom's boy familiar. The great ladies of France and Spain throw aside the robes of state, and go trooping through the narrow street, and chaffer at the wood and ivory carving stalls, and show their dainty white feet on the sands in their bathing-dress, and laugh as the waves play about their shoulders; and take their tea and coffee in the open air—free and frolicksome as normaids! They give the reins to their rich fancy, and invent original dresses suited to the occasion. Old Neptune rolls shells and seaweed to the shore, only to provide them pretty trimmings for jacket and skirt, and Garibaldi and sent-ce-barque. These dainty nymphs "gather shells" not that they may list to the echoes of the sea in them, but that they may steal a march on the inventive powers of fair neighbours. . . . All visitors seem to be perfectly at ease, and the table-d'hôte was a holiday dinner. Everybody talked lightly and unreservedly, and they went forth to take coffee in the open air by the sea. They lingered about the little fair in the high street, when the lamps were lit, or took ices at the café, or went to the casino for a little singing, or dancing, or gambling. Every body was on foot. Carriages are of little or no use at Biarritz, for it is a pocket watering-place, and the fun and enjoyment are a lively, social equality and healthy exercise. The Empress sets forth on foot from the villa, leaning on the Emperor's arm, and calls at one of the hotels to see a friend. Her Majesty may be met strolling on the sands, and she will talk freely and affably, like the rest of the visitors. She stopped one day to admire a dog that was following a gentleman. She coaxed it, and talked to it, and complimented the owner on the possession of it. Whereupon the gentleman begged that her Majesty would accept the animal. A pretty and graceful excuse and a smile were the answers; and the lady passed on, the quietest and most distinguished figure on the sands. Biarritz, in short, is a lively, sociable, extravagant place, where people greatly enjoy themselves in preposterous toilettes: where they masquerade and hold fancy dress balls in the sea; and where there does not appear to be man, woman, or child under a cloud."

Scarborough life does not compare very well—at all events, in appearance—with the gaiety of the French watering-place. There is a sight at Scarborough, however, that Biarritz cannot match:—"Waking in Scarborough on a fine, brisk September morning is a very different affair. I am in state—in a state hotel. Last night when I arrived the visitors were issuing from the great dining-hall, and proceeding in orderly, quiet groups to their respective rooms. Many of the ladies were in a stately dinner dress. I peeped into the drawing-room—a long, effectively-furnished apartment, of which the atmosphere was heavy, and where every group seemed to be absorbed in the reflection that the next group were looking at them. There were two pianos and a card-table or two. Perhaps Miss Smithson would oblige, if her cold were better? Was Miss Jaxy inclined to take a hand? Miss Jaxy frowns at Miss Smithson, who is giving herself airs about her singing, and thinks how in her time ladies knew how to behave themselves. Then there is the laughing, fast Miss Smythe, who is everywhere known as 'the soul of the party.' Of course, she takes to the balcony, and her laughter breaks upon the silence—as she declares this to be 'jolly,' and that to be 'slow.' There is a deliberation about all these proceedings that oppresses the traveller hither from Biarritz. The movements of the people are slower. In the bar of the hotel, where the military gentlemen congregate and ask the young lady who directs the establishment for 'dwy sherwy,' the slowness of the men's movements strikes me forcibly. They lift a spill from the mantelpiece and direct it towards the light as though they were guiding the corner-stone of a building into its place. A Frenchman at Biarritz lights his cigarette in an instant. The walk to the Spa and on the Spa is accomplished, to all appearances, as a duty and not as a delight. The men walk up and down more like seamen than sauntereres. In the evening, when the two bands are playing and all Scarborough is at the Spa, there is a lack of gaiety under the festive lamps. The scene's a lovely one from the heights, when the town, in ravine and rock, from the castle to the shore, is powdered with twinkling lights, and it is hard to tell where the lamps end and the stars begin. The mornings are of the freshest, and the sea that rolls hence to the bleak Scandinavian coast dances the fishing-boats upon its undulations, and comes lapping the walls of the Spa, and salting the air for the good of the luxurious ladies of Manchester, and Sheffield, and Bolton, as well as for the high ladies. There is fat, sweet, English land, hill and dale, and wood and river, and verdure round about. The Forge Valley is a rich and rare sight of leafy wood and emerald pasturage. The lovely lakes are many: to the mighty rock, Flamborough Head; to Hunmanby, where there are wild, large-horned sheep-walks; to the beautiful valley of the Hayburn Wyke. Then there is Robin Hood's Bay, where the fishermen have perched their humble nests in the rocks. Whitby is within reach. To these places, over wold and heath, by trout-streams and over bold hills, the stately Scarborough visitors ride and drive, and get back health and strength, in the most orthodox and staid manner. Their saunter on the Spa, when the band is playing morning and evening, is occasionally relieved by a concert, a dramatic reading, or a visit to the theatre—or, when they feel very lively indeed, by a ball. These comings and goings are duly chronicled in a broadsheet, to their great content. Mr. Mrs., and the three Misses Tirebuck have arrived at the Crown Hotel. Captain and Mrs. Swashbuckler are staying at the Prince of Wales. These are facts which are of interest to the citizens of Scarborough, and provoke a brisk sale of the journal in which they are recorded. At Biarritz there is a newspaper devoted to the arrivals and departures, but it is more liberal and comprehensive than that of Scarborough. Its list of arrivals includes that of Jules Latour, shoemaker, at Mônes. Cornichou's, and of Napoleon Gauthier, carpenter, at the widow Ganche's. Who and what are the Denbhmes? or the Smales? or the Reddiches? Are they people to be visited? Have the girls got any money? Are they quite up to the mark—people a fellow can know in town, and that sort of think? They don't seem to know anybody—anybody being flakes of the upper crust. There is the solitary gay widow who has been at Enos Bonnes, Ems, Baden, and has now actually turned up at Scarborough! Does she know how the gossip about her is stealing round the dinner-tables? She is pronounced to be on a brisk matrimonial excursion. She is all very well, but has she any money? She is pretty and lively, and not old—oh, not more than thirty; but why does she travel alone? She was alone at Enos Bonnes; she knew nobody at Ems, and people fought shy of her at Baden. Of this material is much of the conversation made up. Mrs. Barker has a new bonnet, and, positively, another cloak. What is Mr. Barker's income? That tall, pale man, who is always reading French, perched up on the end of the high seats in the Spa, is Count Lalamo; his wife has—well, my dear, it's a shocking story, and I quite pity the poor man! This by way of enlivening a walk along the heights. Mrs. Grogan has aged very much since last season; her stories about sea-sickness will not do now! I grant the little Gascony village its great gaiety, its thorough holiday look. I confess that its atmosphere is lighter than that of the British Queen of watering-places. The dresses of the Scarborough ladies look tame and generally dull after the firefly tints which deck Madame at Biarritz. But in the mornings, while pater is finishing his paper at home, and while mater is perfecting her toilet for her first walk, let him who would enjoy a cheery sight wind himself down to the Spa. Here shall be find troops of English children, with rosy cheeks, and clear blue eyes, and modest calves, running, laughing, and shouting, so fresh as the sea, and as restless. And their English mothers come down to see them build their sand fortifications; and the ladies look better, it seems to me, with their tender eyes fixed upon the baby, than the Biarritz Countess listening with an exquisite society smile to the artful compliments of Monsieur le Baron. At Biarritz there are no children.'

Payable in London, 4,800,000 dollars, due in 1881.
Secured by a Register Mortgage of the Railway, and all Engines, Rights, Privileges, and Lands, Franchises, Plant, and Property of the Ohio Division of the Railway.
The Bonds are issued in sums of £100, £200, £500, and £1000 each, payable to bearer, and transferable without stamp or indorsement. Interest Coupons are attached to the Bonds, and are payable in London on the 1st of May and 1st of November in each year, free of all taxes in the dollar. The Bonds are issued at 95, at which price they will be offered for sale at £148 10s., carrying Coupons due Jan. 1, 1865. The Coupons represent a dividend of 10 per cent on the Bond at par, or 10 per cent upon the investment.
The immense development of the Western States of America, without any increase in the means of transit to the Seaboard, has created a demand for Railway extension, which has been unprecedented in the history of Railways. The Atlantic and Great Western Railway in the line now fully ready for business, and thoroughly ballasted; but the demand for rolling stock has been so great that the Company have been unable to keep pace with it. Two years and 266 miles of the main line has remained stock up until now. Great efforts have been made to overtake the arrears, and the Company have now in hand 1,000 new cars ready for their opening, and 1,000 more will be completed in the course of every four days, and ten freight-cars every day. In this way the demand will, in reasonable time, be supplied.
As the entire through traffic to and from New York will pass over the Erie Railway, in which the Atlantic and Great Western Railway Company have a large interest, and by the action of the railway and, by such this company has been made to the Company for the expenditure of two million dollars in the construction of engines and cars. The entire amount is now completed, and the contract for the supply of cars will be used exclusively for the through traffic over the Atlantic and Great Western Railroad, and will be delivered at the rate of ten freight-cars per day, commencing on the 1st of October. Following the Directors' Report of the 1st inst., of which extracts are given below, the only after so much of the line was finished as would secure the necessary income for providing the interest on the mortgage bonds, and the work of the Ohio Division of the Railway is completed, is making this additional issue of Bonds.
The Ohio Division of the Railway, 238 miles in length, has been built on the American broad gauge of 6 feet, and passes through a rich and rapidly-settled agricultural district, all produce, agricultural and mineral, have largely increased; hence results the prosperous state of most of the railroads, which pay handsome dividends to the shareholders, after providing interest on indebtedness. There.

The Cincinnati, Hamilton, and Dayton Railway declared last year	13 per cent.
The Cincinnati, Hamilton, and Dayton	10 ,,
The Little Miami	30 ,,
The Madison	20 ,,
The Lake Shore, Cleveland, Painesville, and Erie	10 ,,

The whole system of this railway, which in operation, will consist of—

Atlantic and Great Western Railway	366 miles.
Ohio Division	238 ,,
Franklin Branch and Buffalo Extension	50 ,, 654 ,,

Of the 322 miles have been successfully worked during the summer. For the last three months the earnings have been at the rate of 1,000 dollars per mile per week. As the entire line to be only as great in proportion (and unquestionably they will be considerably larger), there would result—

A gross receipt of	Dols. 4,747,441
Deducting 40 per cent working expenses	1,898,976
Leaving net gain	Dols. 2,373,798
Interest on retired bonded debt, including present issue	Dols. 966,960
Rent of Lease Hold	500,000
Leaving surplus	Dols. 2,907,456

This would, in ordinary circumstances, would be applicable to dividends on the shares, but the amount required to pay interest on Bonds (917,000 dols. being payable in London, or 1,834,000 dols.), at 5 per cent premium for gold and rate of exchange at present ruling high) a portion of the above surplus would be absorbed in the premium for gold.
It is therefore considered prudent to retain the whole of the net earnings until the end of the year, for the purpose of paying the interest in currency rate much higher than at present.
The connection of the Atlantic and Great Western Railway with the Erie Railway secures to the former the government mails, and the Erie Railway Company have entered into a railway administrator is established in Europe as well as in America. Mr. Robb, as President of the Atlantic and Great Western Railway Company, has been elected a Director of the other lines forming the through route between New York and St. Louis, so as to secure unity of action.
The Directors' Report, dated 1st inst., is as follows:—

The terms of issue are as follows:—

LONDON: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 15.

Two illustrations of the mode in which some men would enforce religious observances have just been afforded—one in England, the other in Scotland, and they are worth note. A magisterial decision in this country has consigned two labourers to prison for refusing to obey their employer's order to attend church. The Paisley Free Kirk Presbytery has been discussing what it terms Sabbath desecration, and has received, with apparent approval, some rather remarkable suggestions for promoting a stricter observance of the day of rest. We may not be of opinion that either of these proceedings will be useful to the cause of religion; but, as both are defensible upon certain grounds, they should not be hastily dismissed.

We apprehend that no one who will read these remarks will deny that it is a good thing to attend a place of worship. It is the custom with all the respectable classes, both in England and Scotland; and many who are unfortunately not influenced by the higher motives to avail themselves of religious privileges do, nevertheless, present themselves on Sunday in some sacred edifice—partly from habit, but chiefly because they feel that a solemn and enforced withdrawal of the mind from secular considerations is a healthful operation. We exclude from the argument the case of the thousands on thousands who regard the act of worship as the great duty and happiness of life. We then come to the question, how far those who have power and influence are justified in using them towards the promotion of a custom which is universally acknowledged to be so salutary. We suppose that little difficulty would occur on this point to a member of the Roman Catholic Church who might happen to be possessed of the authority the absence of which is so piteously deplored, in private as all events, by the Roman Catholic clergy. If it be permissible for the sake of benefiting the soul of another to force him to surrender what is considered a false creed, and even to bring him, under penalty of life or limb, within the pale of the Church, it would be sadly illogical to deny that the most stringent measures might properly be used to compel conformity to a habit which is held to strengthen faith and to confirm the worshipper in his spiritual allegiance. Were the Roman Catholic in full power here as in Spain, his organs do not hesitate to say that it would only be on grounds of policy that Protestants might not be forced into the true Church, and, by consequence, be compelled to attend her ceremonies. But, owing to a series of historical incidents, the power which has been maintained in Spain has been forfeited in England; and it is only in that part of the Queen's dominions called Ireland where the priest has the advantage of being allowed to use physical means to keep even his own flock up to the mark of duty. Within the last month we have all read how the theological weapon carnally called a horsewhip has been actively employed in promoting Sabbatical observance on the part of certain Irish Roman Catholics. It is, we think, clear that in England influence of that kind would be somewhat distasteful to the majority. Should opinion change, the Roman Catholic priesthood will find the coveted power in their hands, but as we know how they would use it, we have no immediate apprehension of such a state of things.

Nevertheless, we are afraid that we must admit that those who are inclined to defend the law which sends men to prison for not going to church (and it has found defence in the metropolitan press, when a case of the kind occurred a few weeks ago) are not such good Protestants as they would undoubtedly assert themselves to be. This idea that a man should be compelled to seem religious, and that, if he will not, he should be cast into a dungeon, would find the readiest approbation in Madrid, the only point of difference that would arise being as to the form of the religion to be enforced. It is not supposed that the people of England have got a little further than this, and have made up their minds, in a way that might be somewhat roughly illustrated at need, that Protestantism sanctions no missionary force that exceeds influence and example. It would be a very good thing indeed if all the labouring population were as regular in their attendance at church or chapel as at the alehouse or ginshop, but we are scarcely more prepared to dragoon them to the former than to the latter. It is not worth while to argue the question on theological grounds; the plain English of the matter is that the people regard such measures as tyrannical, and that we will not permit tyranny. It is well that the working of the law has been seen, for it cannot survive another Session. Therefore, there is no need to make a dead enemy. We must have an emancipation from this practice of making us good by force.

But while we in England are agitating—the word is too strong, for there need be no great trouble in a matter of measure demanded by the common feeling—that is practically absurdity may be done away, in Scotland certain classes are clamouring for new restrictions in liberty. Paisley is an important place, and the Free Kirk Presbytery there represents a goodly portion of Paisley sentiment. At a recent meeting of that Presbytery we find that a reverend gentleman made his voice in solemn warning against the spread of Sabbath desecration; and, declaring that no fewer than three omnibuses ply, at morning and evening, between Glasgow and Paisley, he expressed his belief that the powers of the law might be invoked to prevent such criminality. Considering the large population of the two places, we should have thought, in our worldly way, that the supply of conveyance was a modest one, and certainly not more than was necessary to meet social exigence; but Mr. Pyper was shocked. Mr. M'Gregor, another speaker, thinks that travelling omnibus-seekers have much to answer for in the bad example they set, and he would probably like a system of passports, or some cognate device, for preventing English sojourners in Scotland from taking a walk on Sundays. But neither of these gentlemen struck at the root of the evil like a Mr. Pollock, who "adverted in condemnatory terms to the practice, so common with Paisley people, of walking abroad on Sabbath afternoons with their children." We, in our Southron ignorance, might have been pleased with this spectacle, and might have been shocked. Mr. M'Gregor, do a wiser or kinder thing than the sharing healthy and harmless recreation with their little ones; but the stern Pollock will have no walks with children, and probably wishes, like Mr. Fraser, that the powers of the law could be invoked, and that a policeman might remit the children to catechism indoors. Have not these Paisley teachers imbibed some Roman Catholic doctrines, and do they not need another Reformation to teach them that religion is not to be taught by force? We might make the suggestion with more hesitation, but that the leading Glasgow newspaper, the Herald, which may be supposed to speak the mind of enlightened and educated Scotland, ably and indignantly rebukes these Paisley priests, and speaks in behalf of the rightful liberty of the subject as English journals would speak for that of our own countrymen, did we believe that the law that imprisons the non-churchgoer were not virtually dead. But all such attempts at tyranny, whether made here or in the North, deserve something more than contempt, because they are insults to religion, which needs such aid no more than the Ark needed the presumptuous hand of the justly-punished Uzziah the King.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales were present at a grand dinner-party, yesterday week, given by the King of Denmark at Fredensborg Castle, in honour of their Royal Highnesses and the Hereditary Crown Prince.

On Saturday last the Prince, accompanied by the King of Denmark and the principal members of the English, Danish, and Russian suites, proceeded on a grand hunting expedition. Previously to setting out for the forest, the principal members of the Royal party assembled at Fredensborg arranged themselves in groups upon the castle steps for the purpose of being photographed. The courtyard in front of the castle presented an animated appearance, the farmers resident in the neighbourhood having claimed the right of furnishing vehicles, whether for the conveyance of persons or luggage, to the exclusion of the district: about twenty were required to convey the Royal hunting-party. The Prince left Fredensborg at half-past nine, proceeding to the forest ungarn, and drove in the direction of Elsinore. After a fine day's sport, the Royal party returned to the castle at half-past four, having killed ten foxes, six hares, and seventeen stags. The Prince shot two hares and a stag. After the departure of the hunting party, a select dinner was given by the Queen of Denmark to the Princess of Hesse; the Russian Crown Prince and his fiancée, Princess Dagmar; the Crown Prince of Denmark, Princess Thyra, and Prince Waldemar, proceeded in carriages to the Castle of Frederickesborg, about six miles distant from Fredensborg. A trial has lately been concluded at Naples which definitively disposes of the question of the civil and political rights of the married. H.R.H. the Princess of Capua, the second husband of the Queen Dowager of Naples (the mother of the Prince of Capua), took proceedings in La Grande Cour Supérieure de Naples to dispute the right of the Princess of Capua and her children to a share in the Queen's property. The decree of the Court runs as follows:—"The Royal Court of Justice of Naples, sitting on the 4th day of March, 18, 1863, made a solemn and definitive decree declaring the legitimacy of the title of the Prince and Princess of Bourbon Capua, and their rights as heirs of their father and husband, S. A. R. Charles de Bourbon, Prince of Capua, who died at Turin a year ago. The Supreme Court of Justice of Naples, in the second place, declares the widow and children of the late Prince of Capua entitled to the same rights, privileges, and position as the Queen Prince and Princess of the Bourbon family."

The Volunteer force of Staffordshire is assuming a serious character. The colliers are having recourse to an organised system of intimidation. They are holding mass meetings in or near the principal towns in the district. On Monday such a number of miners flocked into Bilston in the morning that the streets were full, it was thought necessary for no less than the mayor of Wolverhampton to follow them into the town. A meeting was held of 8000 persons, at which addresses were delivered by several character of the men. The speeches were attributed to the masters, and the clergymen who had advised the men to enrol themselves as volunteers were denounced. Similar points were referred in the district to which bands of men were to go at half-past four o'clock the next morning—"to draw out the blacklegs"—that is, the men who had accepted the masters' terms and who were at work. Similar proceedings were contemplated at Bloxwich and Walsall. Great excitement prevails in consequence of the above. The danger of disturbance is considered so serious in the neighbourhood that the Lancers are kept in readiness at Birmingham to start for the "black country" at a moment's notice, and a number of volunteers are kept under arms at Bingley Hall in case of any disturbance at Birmingham. A man at work in one of Lord Dudley's mines was arrested in the early morning by a con of gamekeeper lying down through the window of the room where which he, his wife, and his children were sleeping. It exploded, and the roof of his cottage was blown off, he and his family strangely escaping without injury. Two other similar attempts were made.—Lord Leigh, the Lord Lieutenant of Warwickshire, has been endeavouring to negotiate between the Dudley colliers now on strike and their employers. He has had several interviews with the representatives of each section, but hitherto his efforts have not been successful.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

FINE weather, ground as hard as flint, and two immense "pots" in Gratitude and Mall Train, were all found in combination on the Canarwich day. The owner of Gratitude's courage increased as her hour drew nigh; and after having got on, it was said, at 20 to 1 for £1800, he popped on £1400 more at 7 and 8 to 1 on the Monday evening. As for Mall Train, the party declared that she had been "tried to beat a special" at home, and William Day wore quite a "Victory or Westminster Abbey" look as he galloped after his chestnut to the start. Gratitude was a good walking sort for it; but his leg filled the week before, and therefore he was only in Newmarket to give Mr. Harry Hall an audience. It is said that Mr. Jackson had offered £4000 for him. The ninety acceptances were reduced by scratchings to fifty-two on the card, and twenty-nine faced the Bag of Nails.

Mall Train galloped well, and at a distance, both in shape, colour, and going, like one of Greenwood's engines, the lucky one of the Down division are said to have a strong interest—reminded us very much of Kettledrum. Lady Hylda's party entertained some friends at her after her Bedford running with Oldminster; and at 6st. 4 lb., instead of 6st. 13 lb., the public might have considered it a good thing instead of laying 33 to 1. It was said that the stable had stopped three jockeys, and that when they were tried at the scales that morning all of them were over weight. Nothing could have looked better than the Baron's boys as they swept up to the post; but they never showed in any part of the race, which was marked by a large number from the Abbot top, in the hope of getting some of Oldminster's chickens as the horses going very fast for the Cambridgeshire distance which have occasionally borne plums. But, however, they may nothing but a vast spread eagle before they were half across the flat, as Gratitude took out their best shoulder at a pace, and Mall Train kept waddling her and Thalestris. Near the bushes the brace of four-year-olds were running a match, Gratitude with a slight lead; then Mall Train began to pitch a little, and finally ended by going right off the line, almost among the carriages, from sheer distress. Gratitude was leading in the dip, and showed no symptoms of shirking as she climbed the hill; but Jemmy Grimshaw kept creeping up inch by inch and just "collared" her on the post. The race was soon passed down the line of "Jemmy's won the race; it's not the mare." Be that as it may, £1765 net and about £6000 in bets went into Lord Coventry's pocket, through the daughter of Kingston and the colours of Wyndham. The settling, so far, has gone off well. Considering that he had to give a year and 10 lb. and 6 lb. respectively to Gemma and Thalestris, "The Train" ran well enough; but the joke of the day was that John Day should have given his brother B. with Ackworth, and finished before him, says three-quarters of a length to the minute. It will be remembered that Mr. Hill always fancied that Ackworth had an outside chance for the Derby; and although he has kept that to wait pretty long, he has at last fairly turned the flank of the scoffers. If the two horses are worth anything in good company, which is very doubtful, Ackworth's was a great performance, for more reasons than one.

Lord Hastings was successful in three matches on the two first days, in one of which the mare Catalogue, which his Lordship bought in at a £50 gain to the fund at Doncaster, won by a head from Ely; and just won by a head. Lord Glasgow was so dissatisfied at being beaten by his Lordship in another match that it opened out the old General Peel scandal, and on Wednesday the horses were stripped to take them from Dawson—greatly, we should think, to his relief—and Wells wore the colours of the Marquis of Hastings. The chief Baldasare by Monarque was elevated to 23 to 1 for the Derby on the strength of his Chesterfield performance, in which, however, he either began very much overdone or is a bad 800-guinea purchase for Mr. Jackson, had no chance with 6lb. extra. Breese defeated Hengist in a canter for the Royal Stakes, and many thought that the latter made a bad bid in interest by her absence (owing, it is said, to rheumatism) and that of Scottish Chief, as The Toy finished. Kemp by Harrington's rule is making himself a name at the stud; received 7 lb. from Gardevisure, who ran very carefully, and, after shirking all the way up, went right out at last, and really killed a mare who is sometimes backed very nearly been marked by two dead heats—one of three, and the other of four, at which horse is the best of the pair, Cloth is the other who each only beaten by a head. Newmarket has always had an autumn specialty for the contests of which habitual still remained four below Nat, Whitehouse, and Sam Mann fought out the Glasgow Stakes in 1845, and Job Marson, Nat, and Frank Butler (who all died within four years of each other) the same contest in 1851. Mr. Somerville Oake finish was an echo of the Epsom. John Osborne bought back Chevrett's mare, when he sold to Isaac Day, for whom either bean very much overdone or is a bad 800-guinea purchase for Mr. Jackson, had no chance with 6lb. extra. Breese defeated Hengist in a canter for the Royal Stakes, and many thought that the latter made a bad bid in interest by her absence (owing, it is said, to rheumatism) and that of Scottish Chief, as The Toy finished. Kemp by Harrington's rule is making himself a name at the stud; received 7 lb. from Gardevisure, who ran very carefully, and, after shirking all the way up, went right out at last, and really killed a mare who is sometimes backed very nearly been marked by two dead heats—one of three, and the other of four, at which horse is the best of the pair, Cloth is the other who each only beaten by a head. Mr. Somerville Oake finish was an echo of the Epsom. John Osborne bought back Chevrett's mare, when he sold to Isaac Day, for whom she realised for 500 gs.; a Vedette filly, from Dulcibella's dam, fetched 300 gs.; and Joseph Dawson bought Verger for 360 gs. Lord Stamford's Neighbour was bought in, and Hengist made 500 gs. A sale seems to have been effected of Blair Athol, whose name, according to Baily, was written so less than three times before the Derby to Messrs. Holt and Crook's betting ledger.

Croker may be said to have ended the season (and a sadly lifeless one it has been) with a Newmarket match between Notts and Kent, combined against Cambridgeshire and Yorkshire. The latter, thanks to Haywood's fifty-two, won in one innings, and it was essentially "a bowler's match." E. M. Grace has made an innings of 139 in an innings of Gloucestershire against Marylebone College.

Brown, who is said to be "the coming man" among pedestrians, has been doing twenty miles in 2h. 3m. 8s. at Hackney-wick, and sprint runners seem to be divided as to whether Cambridge's eighty yards to Captain Machell's hundred, and beat him. The captain's confidence is superb; and we suppose that it may actually take to the match with his wonted seat, although he is reported to have been tried pretty high with a colonel.

The San Francisco Bulletin says that two trees growing in the Big-tree Grove, 300 ft. high and 60 ft. in circumference, have been named after John Bright and Richard Cobden. The trees were formally christened, and two oblong tablets of white Californian marble, bearing the names respectively, in deep black letters, of John Bright and Richard Cobden, have been affixed to the trees, fastened by notches in the bark with stout copper screws, high enough to be out of harm's way and yet to be easily read.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

I. H., of Birmingham.—A guess so badly defended is quite devoid of interest. To say nothing of his previous moves, why should Black, or more it, have played 4. Kt to B 3rd? Again, at move 16, why did he not take the Kt with his Bishop, instead of playing 16. Kt to B 3rd?

C. W. P.—Your letter has been received, but we must call your attention to a future Number.

C. W. T.—Try 1. R to R 6sq (ch), 2. B to K 8 4th (ch), &c.

S. G. C.—Your note to hand. Is it your present object to mystify or to please? If the latter, by giving a Price or Pawn of his own to a square to which it cannot be legally moved, your opponent's King is placed in check, which is impossible. All check must be made, as in the choice of his adversary, either move his own King to a square to which it can legally, fortnightly, or time to move, or play any other move legally movable which is not in check. Your problem, Castling, under circumstances forbidden by the fundamental laws, must be considered a failure move in the meaning of the clause.—Chess Praxis, p. 19.

CHURCH AND UNIVERSITIES.

A memorial window has been placed in Feniton Church, Devonshire, to the memory of the late Sir John Patteson, Kt., ex-Judge.

On the Feast of St. Michael and All Angels the little parish of All Saints, Morebarne, Hunts, was the scene of unusual rejoicing, to celebrate the recent renovation of the church.

The consecration of Lutterworth Church passed off successfully, on the 29th ult. This was the third church consecrated within three days by the Bishop of Lincoln.

The Right Rev. Dr. H. B. Whipple, Bishop of Minnesota, United States, has arrived in England, and has been on a visit to the Right Rev. Dr. Baring, Lord Bishop of Durham, at Auckland Castle.

On Sunday morning the new Bishop of Peterborough (Dr. Jeune) officiated at the services in connection with the reopening of Cosby's Church, Leicester. The sacred edifice was crowded in every part.

A stained window to the memory of the late Mr. Giles-Fuller, M.P. for Hertfordshire, is to be placed in the parish church, Berkhamsted, Hertfordshire. As the subscription was larger than was required for the purpose, the surplus will go to the enlargement of the High-street Schools.

The Bishop of Salisbury, in his charge to the clergy and churchwardens of his diocese, made several remarks respecting the provision of retreats to which the clergy may withdraw themselves for awhile from their ordinary duties, and give themselves, more entirely than at other times, to prayer, self-examination, meditation, and other religious exercises.

Ordinations are announced for the last Sunday in Advent by the Archbishop of York, the Bishops of London, Winchester, Chichester, Oxford, Hereford, Lincoln, Bath and Wells, Norwich, Carlisle, Worcester, Ely, and Peterborough. The Bishop of Rochester intends to hold an Ordination on Sunday, Dec. 18. The Bishop of Salisbury's next Ordination will be on the second Sunday in Lent, March 12, 1865.

The Rev. W. Conway, who was a few weeks ago installed as Canon of Westminster, with the duty of reading the Second Lesson, changed the accustomed day of "reading in" on Sunday. The rev. gentleman read the whole of the service both morning and evening, although very much against the wish of the choir—as the psalms, canticles, and anthems—which were sung as usual. There were large congregations at both services.

The Archbishop of Canterbury began his primary visitation to the clergy of his diocese at the Metropolitan Church, Canterbury, on Tuesday morning. After morning service the clergy assembled in the ancient chair of St. Augustine, in the south transept of the Cathedral, where he delivered a long charge to the clergy of the diocese. His Grace dwelt on various matters connected with the present condition of the diocese, and expressing the hope that the communication he was about to make would lead to good results, he said he would not enter into the question of the burial service, but merely say that, having requested the Archbishop of York to consult the appointment of a Royal Commission for a revision of the Table of Lessons and some other matters, it was intended, if the recommendation of Parliament such a Commission would be appointed. After referring at some length to several topics of interest to the clergy, the Archbishop left the choir chamber, the delivery of which occupied nearly two hours.

An angry and unedifying correspondence has arisen between two dignitaries of the Church—the Bishop of Manchester and the Vicar of Rochdale—has been published. The question at issue is the propriety of the sale of some Church land, and soon got so warm that the Bishop charged the Vicar with being guilty of "a misstatement bordering on falsehood," while the Vicar retorted by lectiring the Bishop for indulging in "reckless and thoroughless sadly inconsistent with the character of a Christian minister and damaging only to their author." The Bishop subsequently refused to countersign the Vicar's name to a certificate of his fitness for ordination, and Dr. Molesworth demanded an apology for the insult, and accused the Bishop of "tyrannical prostitution of episcopal power" in the interpretation of a very veiled defamation or persecution." The Bishop refused to apologise point-blank, said that he should to the same question, and declined to carry on the correspondence with the Vicar, or to countersign his name as worthy of credit. As Dr. Molesworth publishes the correspondence, he must have copies.

The consecration of St. Thomas's Church, Radcliffe, by the Bishop of Manchester, took place on Saturday last. The church occupies the site of a substantial edifice built, in 1813, by the late proprietor of the manor, the mother of the Earl of Wilton, and affords accommodation for 1,000 persons. Owing to the increased requirements of the place for a few years ago, found necessary entirely to remove the old church, which was solvency in its structure that it could not be repaired except at considerable cost in labour and expense. The foundation-stone of the new church was laid on the 21st of July, 1862. It is built in the Transition style of the 13th and 14th centuries, and consists of the chancel, 35½ ft. by 19 ft., and the nave, 70 ft. long by 24 ft. wide; the chancel, 35½ ft. by 19 ft., and the north and south aisles each 11 ft. wide. Owing to the want of funds, the tower has not been completed at present: it is covered just above the nave roof, but ultimately the tower will be 120 ft. high to the summit of the spire, and, externally, 20 ft. square. All the pews are open. The sittings will be entirely free. The remaining portion, including that of the chancel, is appropriated to the use of the Sunday-school children. The cost of the church, exclusive of the tower, was £7,000, of which £2,000 was raised, Lord Wilton giving £1000. The completion of the tower will involve an additional expenditure of about £3,000.

The Bishop of Lincoln last week delivered a charge to his clergy, and referred at some length to the sceptical tendencies of the day. He considers that the egotistic speculations of the present day will end in the admission into the practical English mind, and attributes its temporary prevalence to the fact that it is the fashionable mode of thought. Materialism, he suggested to the habits of intellectual self-confidence which have been fostered by the rapid triumphs of science. Pantheism, he said, was nothing but a rebounded from high, hard assertions of authority. He alleges that Dr. Colenso, having unhappily mingled the functions of a mathematical tutor up man's subjective judgment as the ultimate standard of truth and falsehood, "has gone on with characteristic pugnacity to the denial of the fundamental doctrines of our faith . . . and has built up another gospel, a rival to the revealed Gospel of the Eternal Jesus Christ." Again, the High Church Prelate considers that, though the utterance of such opinions from such a source afforded reasonable ground for anxiety, the result would be neither so much alarm, and pain, and sorrow, will soon sleep on neglected shelves, by the side of the Talmuds and the Koran. Christ the Lord reigns, and the Holy Power whose breath could dispel the clouds around us; and in the meanwhile he exhorts his clergy so to frame their lives and to preach sermons that they might be proofs of the power of religion which no sceptics could gainsay—an argument which the most unlearned could understand, and which convinced those who were too indolent or too prejudiced to reason.

The Bristol Church Congress opened on Tuesday afternoon, the members and a large number of visitors attending Divine service at the cathedral in the morning. The opening meeting was subsequently held place in the evening, in the Victoria Rooms, when a discussion took place on the increase of the episcopacy, in which the Earl of Shaftesbury took part; and it was recommended that a petition to Parliament on the subject should be drawn up by the congress. Yesterday morning the congress formed the subject of a paper by the Rev. Canon M'Neile, who suggested that diocesan synodsmen should be appointed in every parish, and that the parish sist: that short services, compiled on authority, should be used; and lay readers—not only subscriptions, but unmarried persons—should be employed. They should not lose the help of enthusiasts. The Roman Catholics took every advantage of this enthusiasm. The Rev. Prebendary Trevor read a paper highly of the value of lay agency, which he illustrated by facts that had come under his own observation. Mr. Ramsden read a paper on the subject of discussion. P. W. S. Miles, Esq., presided at the sectional meeting, in which the subjects of Synods of the Church and Convocation of the Province of York came on for discussion. The Rev. Prebendary Trevor read a paper "On the Revival of Synods of the Church." The Rev. Dr. Hook spoke in favour of revival of synodical action, more especially in view of the recent judgment of the Privy Council. The Ven. Archdeacon Denison, the Rev. Dr. Lee, Mr. Napier, and others spoke in favour of the revival of synods. The Archdeacon of Ely then read a paper "On Diocesan and Provincial Synods," and was followed by the Rev. Prebendary Harris. The meetings were continued on Wednesday and Thursday, when papers were read and addressed by following among others:—The Rev. Canon M'Neile, Rev. Canon Kingsley, the Archdeacon of Ely, Hon. and Rev. Augustus Legge, Rev. Canon Miller, A. J. B. Beresford Hope, Esq., the Archdeacon of Meath, the Dean of Chester, Dean of Canterbury, the Archdeacon of Westmoreland, Prebendary Freeman, Lord Lyttelton, Rev. D. Bayley, Rev. Erskine Neale, Rev. Canon Moseley, Rev. Prebendary Bevan, Rev. Mr. Baldwin, and Rev. Mr. Bowen.

The examination will commence on Wednesday, the 26th inst., in the college-hall. Candidates will be examined in the following subjects:—1. The Holy Scriptures. 2. Ecclesiastical History within the University." The Rev. Samuel Joseph Hulme, M.A., of Wadham College, has been appointed upon the Foundation of Manchester Grammar-school, one of the masters of the school whose duty it is, in conjunction with his three colleagues, to examine candidates for "responsions."

The second annual meeting of the English Synod of the United Presbyterian Church was held at Allan Glen's Chapel, Norfolk-st., Monday and the three following days. On Monday the Rev. Dr. Hugh Hutton, Edinburgh (the retiring Moderator), presented a short address, looking for his text the two last lines of the 11th verse of the 73rd Psalm. At the close the Rev. Dr. Hutton, in the name of the Church, presented to the Rev. Dr. Crighton delivered an extemporary prayer. The Rev. Mr. Scott then read his charge to the Rev. Dr. Hutton, in the name of the Church, presented to the past year and the new congregations erected. Other changes in the ministry were noticed, and the Rev. Moderator intimated his resignation for the very good honour they had done him in electing him to that office. He would not have accepted it except that he felt that the duty of the report he had received from his brother ministers convinced him that, whatever might be the result, they would be willing to continue their assistance to get through them. They would now have to nominate his successor. The Rev. Dr. Hutton then proposed as his successor the Rev. Dr. Andidates. The Rev. Robert Redpath was unanimously elected Moderator, upon the Rev. Dr. Hutton, the Rev. Dr. Crighton, and the Rev. Mr. Scott were appointed the newly-elected Moderator. The roll for the future proceedings of the meeting was then called, and the meeting was adjourned to the meeting on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday; and on Wednesday evening a public meeting was held in the Queen's Rooms, at which the Rev. Dr. Crighton presided.

Yesterday week Robert Hartley, toll collector, was summoned to appear before the Manchester Borough Magistrates, charged with assaulting the Rev. Stephen Ray Birley, Vicar of Youlgreave, he being at the time in the execution of his duty. The Rev. Mr. Birley, on the evening of the most splendid and admitted the illegality of the toll. The defendant was fined 40s. and costs, or in default one month's imprisonment. Mr. Hartley Act (without any reference to the day of the week) exempts clergymen from tolls when they are passing on the business of their office. The Rev. Mr. Birley was going on going to or returning from visiting any sick parishioner, or on any other parochial duty, and so he had a right to pass free.

THE SOLUBILITY OF GOLD IN ACIDS.—Mr. Arthur Reynolds, in the Chemical News, No. 253, reports the following interesting experiment on the solubility of gold in nitric acid. He says that if a piece of gold foil in nitric acid until the gold was left in a powder. On heating this powder with nitric acid, it was found to be completely dissolved, and, on diluting with water, gave a purple precipitate. This at first led me to suppose that the gold was in a state of minute division, but on allowing the liquid to stand for some time with strong sulphuric acid, without any solution taking place; but, on diluting with water, the whole immediately became a purple precipitate in the liquid, and, on pouring into water, the same blue precipitate was formed. Other experiments were made, and the same results were obtained. I tested to ascertain their purity; but the solution contains the gold evidently in a state of minute division, and not in solution. I used pure gold and pure nitric and hydrochloric acids, for it is again precipitated by a solution of a ferrous salt, and the heat been continued, the gold would have been dissolved. Mr. Reynolds, in the Chemical News, No. 253, no doubt a larger quantity would have been obtained. Mr. Reynolds, in the Chemical News, No. 253, quotes some experiments confirming the results obtained by Mr. Reynolds, and considers that the gold is precipitated in a state of minute division, and assumes a colour which is either bluish purple or brown by reflected light, according to the manner in which the gold is precipitated. Mr. Reynolds, however, considers that the question of indicating the exact constitution of the gold compound, which does not appear to be analogous to any other known gold salt, is reserved for future investigation. Mr. Reynolds, however, considers that the gold is precipitated in a state of "colloidal solution," by Pelletier, inasmuch as it cannot be asserted, with respect to the solutions discovered by Mr. Reynolds, that, when gently heated, it deposits metallic gold."

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

In the early part of the week, owing to recent additional failures being announced in the discount market, and the unsatisfactory state of trade, the Bank of England raised the rate of discount from 6 to 7 per cent, and slightly enquired. VISIT OF THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES TO SWEDEN: TORCHLIGHT PROCESSION TO THE ROYAL PALACE AT STOCKHOLM.—FROM SKETCHES BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

successful amateur photographer Colonel Stuart Wortley, is chairman. Whether the patent rights can be maintained remains to be seen. It is known that an English photographer has been experimenting with the salts of uranium for some years, and his researches have been published. And we all know that former photographic patents have either failed to afford protection or the inventions they were designed to guard have been superseded by the rapid progress of the art.

The Metropolitan Board of Works has given permission for the placing of the bronze memorial-statue of Sir James Outram, for which a public subscription has been set on foot, upon the new Thames-way, when the embankment of the river is sufficiently advanced for its reception. The great architectural deficiency of the metropolis, compared with nearly all foreign capitals and the sacred ways of the ancients, is the want of an avenue or artery, bearing some sort of proportion to the magnitude of the city, with unity of design, so as to give a grand and imposing effect by its ensemble. This want should, however—nay, will—be supplied by the new way and the splendid character of the piles of buildings which are to rise on the noble site of the river banks. And if, as seems to be implied by the permission given for the erection of this statue, a long series of statues may be expected to follow, we may fairly look forward to seeing the grimy banks of Old Father Thames present an aspect which for richness, vastness, and magnificence, would be unapproachable by any other city in the world.

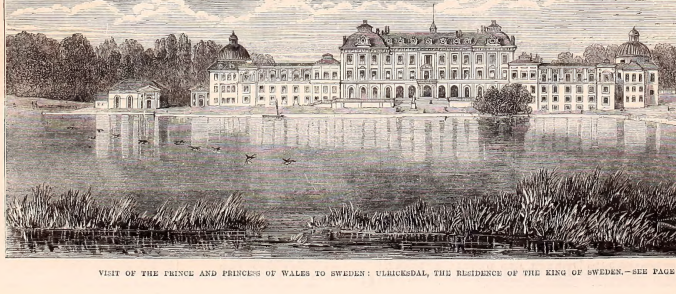
A bronze gilt colossal statue has just been discovered at Rome, which, if report may be trusted, promises to prove one of the most remarkable antique works in bronze exhumed in modern times, and to rank second only in interest to such remains of ancient art as the unequalled bronze equestrian statue of Marcus Aurelius before the Capitol, and the bronze horses of Venice. The statue was found by Signor Righetti, in making some excavations in the courtyard of the Palazzo Pio, on the Piazza del Biscione, which he has purchased from the Government. This residence was known to have covered the ancient theatre built by Pompey, which contained 20,000 seats, and before which was the famous portico of one hundred columns, celebrated by many of the poets, and adorned with statues, paintings, and plantations. In this portico Horatius is said by Appian to have sat in judgment as Prætor on the morning of Cæsar's death. The statue was found lying on its back, and when all the earth was removed was found to measure fourteen feet. The left arm, which is bent, holds an orb, whilst the right arm falls nearly straight by the side, and the hand grasps a club. It is therefore, no doubt a statue of the "Young Hercules," and Hercules was the tutelary deity of Pompey the Great. It is said to be a first-rate, highly-finished specimen of art, and is of great value in every way. From the mode in which it was found placed and protected, it is evident that at some period of expected pillage precautions were taken for its preservation. It was not only placed flat, but built over with slabs of travertine, forming a kind of pointed roof.

The engraving by Mr. Francis Holl after Mr. Frith's "Railway Station" is progressing rapidly, if we take into consideration the labour involved by so elaborate a composition. A proof of an advanced state of the etching of the whole plate has just been placed on view at Messrs. Graves's, Pall-mall. This preparatory work does credit to the engraver, and promises to give a highly-satisfactory result. The character of the faces is so distinctly emphasised by the simple outlines that if preserved, and not stipped away in the final stages, the print may, in some few instances (as in the painter's portrait of himself), have an advantage over the occasional excess of trim smoothness in the picture itself. The original, we may add, is about to be exhibited in Birmingham. Messrs. Graves have also recently published three important finished engravings. One of these is the engraving after "The Lost Sheep," by Sir Edwin Landseer, by the painter's brother, Mr. Thomas Landseer. The picture was in the Bicknell Collection, and is now the property of Mr. Pender, M.P. The subject of this fine but not very widely-known work is a Highland shepherd surrounded by his sniffing, scraping, howling collies, extricating three sheep, one of which is buried from view in the snow which has drifted down a mountain slope. The engraving is in the mixed manner peculiar to the engraver, and evinces genuine art-feeling: the soft snow printed by the marks of man, and dog, and sheep; the frosty, mist-laden atmosphere, and the texture of the sagacious sheep-dogs are admirably expressed.

Another engraving is by Mr. Stevenson, after Sir Edwin Landseer's "Taming the Shrew"—the picture exhibited two or three years ago (now belonging to the Duke of Sutherland), of Miss Gilbert (since dead) lying on the neck of, and giving a saucy slap in the face to, a vicious mare which she has tamed à la Rarey. This engraving is very faithful, and, on the whole, acceptable, though a little heavy and monotonous owing to the quantity of dark middle-tint. The third engraving is a close and careful reproduction by Mr. Simmons of Mr. T. Faed's touching picture of "Sunday Morning in the Backwoods," with a sturdy backwoodsman reading the Bible to his family of three generations, including one invalid sister in hopeless consumption.

The two large and elaborate engravings after Mr. Henry O'Neil's "Eastward, Ho!" and "Home Again" have (after being issued to subscribers by another firm) been published by Messrs. Moore, M'Queen, and Co., of Berners-street. The pictures are so well known that we need hardly say the first represents a string of wives and sweethearts, relatives and friends descending the side of a transport-ship bound for Balaclava, and taking their sorrowful adieus of the officers and men clustering about the bulwarks and rigging; and that the second depicts the scene, with its many well-imagined concomitants, upon the meeting on their return after the Crimean war, and also at a ship's side, of the survivors with their relatives and friends. It was for these pictures the artist was elected A.R.A. They are, doubtless, the most important and best-remembered pictorial illustrations of any incident bearing on the Crimean campaign—though the French have probably a score of more elaborate representations of events connected therewith. The engraver, Mr. Davy, has executed his task very faithfully and effectively.

The series of large "Photographic Portraits of Eminent and Illustrious persons," by Mr. Mayall—the best and most noteworthy set of photographic portraits in course of publication, if we except the "Out of Focus" studies by Mr. Wynfield, has lately received accessions in portraits of Tennyson (a second and very satisfactory photograph), Lord Stanley, the Bishops of London and Oxford, the Archbishop of Armagh, and Lord Brougham. The carte-de-visite series, by the same photographer, of "Celebrities of the London Stage" (the first of which, Charles Mathews in "Cool as a Cucumber," we engraved) has also been added to with the following:—Miss Bateman, Herr Wachtel, Mrs. Stirling, Mr. H. Compton, and Mr. Buckstone, all in character, and all excellent, both as regards pose and manipulation. The portraits are accompanied by short biographical notices.



THE LATE WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR.

THE LATE WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR.

In our Impression of the week before last we made such remarks upon the character and genius of Walter Savage Landor as seemed to be called for by his recent death. The Portrait of him which we have now engraved, from a photograph by Mr. Herbert Watkins, will perhaps be recognised by some of those familiar with his writings as a characteristic likeness of the kind of man they have imagined such an author to be; though without having met him in person. In one of the memoirs published after the day after we received the news of his death reference was particularly made to certain feature of his countenance and habitual attitudes—the head cast backward in the up-looking face, and the eyebrows strangely lifted high into the broad, sloping forehead, as well as the quick, fierce, and restless eye—which might be fancied to express Landor's most prominent moral and intellectual qualities: his mighty self-will, his arrogant audacity, his capacity of destructive rage, his fine imagination and fastidious taste, his delicate perception, his want of speculative power, his preparedness to paradoxical views, his tendency to run into extremes, and whatever else would be ascribed to him by the discerning critic of his works. Our readers may, however, be left to decide upon the justice of this opinion. They will, at any rate, look with some interest upon the portrait of a man of great originality and force of mind, who, having won a high rank in classical English literature, and taken his part in the battles of opinion for seventy years, died, the other day, at the great age of ninety, and left a name which will abide longer than those of some more facile and popular writers. He was born on the 30th of January, 1775, at Ipsley Court, Warwickshire; he died, on the 17th of September last, at Florence. Ten years ago, in anticipation of his own death, the poet composed three lines, which may perhaps serve for his epitaph:—

Nature I loved, and next to Nature, Art;

Come, Iris, child, begin; we're in a hurry."
"Well, then, Madam," returned the cool-client,
"As I flew earthwards to perform my duty,

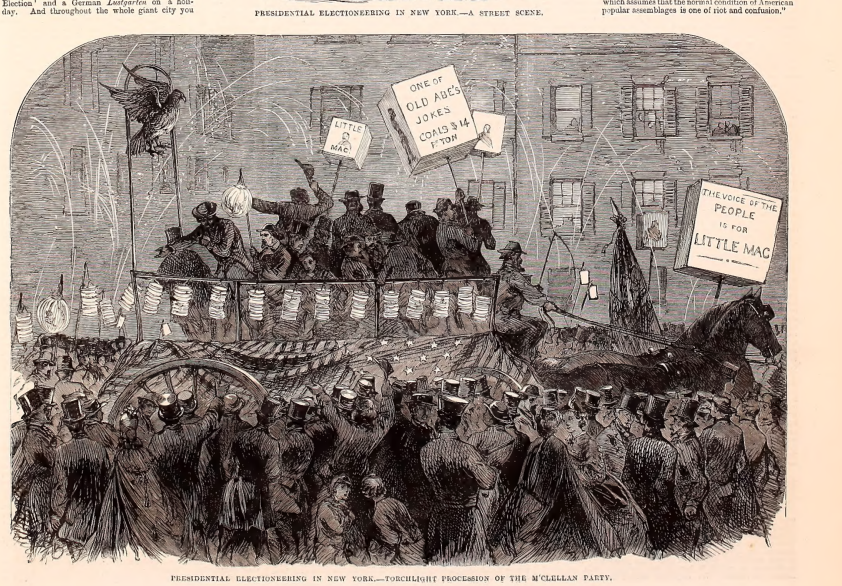
PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONEERING IN NEW YORK.



WE have engraved two sketches by Mr. C. D. Shanly, of New York, who explains their subjects in the following passage of his letter, dated the 18th ult.:—

"On the night before last there was another tremendous demonstration here in favour of M'Clellan and Pendleton for the presidency and vice-presidency of the United States, respectively. The railings which surround the Park of Union-square (the park is a circle within the square) were hung everywhere with coloured lanterns, and the ten stands erected for the speakers of the night were similarly illuminated. The cannon seemed to be louder, and the fireworks more brilliant and complicated, than I remember to have heard and seen at any similar celebration here. There was an endless torchlight procession of the M'Clellanites belonging to the several wards of the city; and the torches, every now and then, discharged globes of fire and showers of sparks into the air. All was a blaze of many-coloured light, contrasting finely with the cold splendour of the moon, which rose up very bright and clear while the scene was at its height. Conspicuous in the procession were a number of large waggons, draped with the national flag and hung around with Chinese lanterns and other luminous objects. So crowded were these vehicles that they resembled moving pyramids of acrobats. They all displayed an immense variety of transparencies, stranger in their suggestions than Longfellow's 'banner with a strange device;' and I noticed one of them with a large stuffed eagle mounted over it upon rods, in a position intended to represent the sweeping soar of that noble bird. The jokes of Mr. Lincoln were a favourite subject for the legends upon the transparencies—the rather grim one of 'Coal, 14 dols. per ton' being greeted by the populace with groans as it swayed past. One of the waggons bore the ship 'Constitution'—a good-sized vessel, barque-rigged, and manned with a crew of young fellows in red shirts. Passing through a dark by-street, a man on horseback galloped past me, pulling up his horse with a jerk every few yards, and discharging a shower of fireworks from some contrivance carried in his hand. As he disappeared into the dark, through which he loomed up here and there in a glory of his wildfire, he suggested the idea of a mounted ignis fatuus, come up from his native swamps to contribute to the harmony of the occasion. The sentiment throughout this demonstration was one of disgust with the war; the feeling, that with the election of M'Clellan peace will be restored—somehow."

Mr. G. A. Sala, in one of his recent letters, comments upon the scene as follows:—"Not so many years have passed away since, in England, a knight of the shire could not be chosen to sit in Parliament without brass bands, flags, streamers, open carriages with white horses, and abusive placards—without the punching of heads, the blackening of eyes, and the plebotomising of noses. And our cousins at New York preserve these undoubted relics of the manners of their fathers; but they have added to them strange accompaniments and supplements, for many of which the Germans are responsible. Thus, a nocturnal, outdoor mass meeting presents in its external aspect a curious combination of Hogarth's 'Four Scenes of an Election' and a German Lustpartie on a holiday. And throughout the whole giant city you will find the same odd mixture of English and Teutonic elements of civilisation—the grog-shop grafted on to the Gemüthlichkeit; the rowdy getting drunk on whisky and sobering himself on lager beer; the impulsiveness of the Yankee neutralised by the stolidity of the Dutchman. I happened to pass through Union-square in the afternoon, and watched with great interest the preparations for the meeting. You might have fancied that a Cremorne fête was about to come off. Platforms and firework galleries had sprung up as if by magic, horizontal beams were hung with festoons of parti-coloured Chinese lanterns, and banners, and transparencies, and flowery devices, as yet unlit, abounded. I came back after dinner, when it was quite dark. The square was broken into patches of 'brilliant coruscations of light,' and presented a really beautiful and picturesque spectacle. Every platform was garlanded by the Chinese lanterns I have spoken of, and the gas-lamps had, besides, been unscrewed from their posts and hung to the sides of the scaffolds, to give light to the reporters. There was the grand stand, whence the great guns of the Democracy were to orate, and a number of smaller platforms for the less shining lights, and a German stand whence the young ravens of Fatherland were could be fed with interminable jobations ending in 'ay' and 'ert.' There was no particular Irish stand, Ireland in the United States is everywhere. At eight o'clock artillery began to roar from the inclosures of the square. Many brass bands then began to bray. The 'Star-spangled Banner' blended with the waltz from 'Faust.' A big eagle in gas suddenly spread his dazzling wings over the portal of the Maison Dorée. Delmonico's, which is not fifty yards from the square, was illumined from roof to basement. The waiters rushed about nervously. They had a heavy night before them. The orators 'change their breath' before they speak, and sup afterwards. The neighbouring bars were full to overflowing; the hackney-coach horses champed in the first floors of the livery-stables; for in this city horses go up stairs to bed, like Christians. Small boys filled the branches of the trees; no policemen ordered them to come down. The Broadway squad were clustered round the different stands, while from the corner of Fourteenth-street, which is at right angles with the square, a blinding ray from a calcium-light apparatus shot across for many hundred feet—a bridge of radiance. There was a splendid display of fireworks before the procession of the 'Wards' entered the square. Rockets went whizzing about in every direction, making one feel rather anxious as to the particular direction in which the sticks might fall. Behind me, watching the dark and dense groups on which from moment to moment the lurid glow of the fireworks fell, and which were cleft in twain by that blinding cord of calcium light, stood a knot of European diplomatists. Sure enough, before the termination of the proceedings on Thursday night, a pistol went off in the outskirts of the crowd, and a young man was shot in the leg by an unknown assailant. With this exception, the meeting passed off with the most perfect peace and harmony. There may have been at one period 35,000 persons present, but I did not see a blow struck nor hear an angry word spoken. There is no mistake into which foreigners are more likely to fall than that which assumes that the nervous condition of American popular assemblages is one of riot and confusion."

OUR COLOURED ILLUSTRATIONS.

THE LIFE-BOAT OFF TYNEMOUTH BAR.

With this Double Number of our Journal we present to the readers of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS a pair of Coloured Engravings of which the one to be first noticed is a copy of the interesting picture by Mr. Edward Duncan, representing "The Life-boat off Tynemouth Bar." We may fitly take this opportunity to commend a little upon the objects of The Royal National Life-boat Institution, while Mr. Duncan's picture may serve to illustrate the character of its operations. It should be remarked, in the first place, that Tynemouth, on the Northumberland coast, is the locality where the life-boat was first invented, and where the institution has performed some of its noblest services to shipwrecked crews.

It was in the month of December, 1849, that a fearful calamity took place on Tynemouth Bar. Twenty-four men put off in the life-boat of that town to the assistance of their fellow-creatures, in the tremendous effort the life-boat made to cross the bar, twenty of her gallant crew unhappily perished. The plan of the life-boat at that time in use, and which caused was that of Henry Greathead, who first brought out the life-boat, in 1774. Many improvements were afterwards introduced into the country, and earnest appeals were made for an improvement of the life-boat. The present plan of Northumberland, while £100 for a life-boat which should ably answer even that case being captured. The result was that 290 guineas were sent in by Mr. James Beeching, of Great Yarmouth; and the Duke of Northumberland, as the donor of the prize, which was ultimately awarded to him, the credit of having produced the first self-righting life-boat that was practically used in the country. That boat, however, had some serious defects. The National Life-boat Institution received, in 1851, James Peake, then Assistant Master Shipwright at her Majesty's dockyard, Woolwich—has gradually improved on the original plan of the life-boat, and the result has been most satisfactory. The institution has now a life-boat establishment which probably answers more than can be required of it. Beeching's own boat has been altered, and is now stationed at Ramsgate, etc. It has saved hundreds of lives from ship-wrecks on the Goodwin and other sands,—lives which, but for its services from wrecks on the Girdler Sands. The present life-boats of the institution can hardly capsize under the most adverse circumstances; but even when that accident does occur, the boats, from their peculiar construction, will immediately right themselves.

Nearly 200 of these boats have been built since 1851, when Mr. Forrest, for the institution, set up one for our colonies and foreign Governments; and such boats are now to be found on almost every navigable coast of the United Kingdom. In that period there have been as many lives in a year. The institution has now 137 life-saved under its charge, which save about 300 lives and 400 lives from ship-lifeboat to be saved annually 14,000 persons from different wrecks, and has expended £120,000 on its life-boat establishments.

If this description represents, as we have said, one of the new class of life-boats going off to a wreck, Mr. Duncan's picture, on the other will be observed, is fast approaching the wreck; and, in order to facilitate the rescue of the crew, a rocket apparatus is being fired by the man in the bows, the better to effect communication with the stranded ship. Such is often the character of the services performed by the life-boats of the institution on our coasts.

The life-boat at Tynemouth is called the "Constance," and was presented to the institution by Mr. J. Fenwick, late of Seaton Burn, Northumberland. It is somewhat remarkable that the first occasion on which the life-boat at Tynemouth has been on two occasions himself saved from a watery grave. The life-boat of the institution, as we have to relate an instance of the distressing scenes through which life-boat men have often to pass in the terrible storms of winter storms and shipwrecks. It is a short though painful story which we have to tell, but one which, as a record of humanity and courage, deserves to be concerned in it was one called the "Friendly Nelly," a Yarmouth struggling in vain, and rapidly driving in upon the coast. The coastguard-men followed her along the shore with the life-boat, ready to act as they were, the people of the villages turned out to join them; so that before long the Tynemouth life-boat crew, also, were hacking, pulling, and trembling for the fate of this vessel. It was a very sad sight to see. Some of the vessel's sails had been blown away, and she grew more and more unmanageable amidst the terrible sea that had wound and over her. At length, abandoning their desperate effort to get to the northward, her crew, in the hope of saving her for Yarmouth sands, five miles north of Shields. She was so still three-quarters of a mile from the shore. It was impossible to reach her with the rockets. Only one hope remained—the life-boat! As fast as they could run through the driving wind, the men dragged the life-boat along the sands, and fishermen made their way to the station of the life-boat belonging to the National Life-boat Institution, the horses were harnessed to the carriage, and down to the sands they came at a gallop. The life-boat was speedily manned, a gallant crew of volunteers took up for their own lives; and not a moment too soon did they put out from ship, which was now breaking up. Into the sea, her crew in the rigging, and the life-boat laid alongside; the vessel was grappled, and the boat delivered; but, even as they left the rigging, one man was much, one in the fore and head, the mast and his shoulder dislocated, and three consummate skill, two of the life-boat men were also picked up, and as third man went down to his death, as he was being hauled on board. A seaman stood up to save the boy, but the vessel began to part, dished in again, to be swept back over the deck, and to crush the life-boat. Not until one minute longer in that position, the cutter, in a hoarse and broken voice, to "Cut the rope." In an instant the life-boat was swept away from the wreck; and not for a second too soon, for at once the mainmast fell, with an awful crash, on the very spot the boat had just left. The vessel was now rapidly breaking up. The boy, "his face covered with blood," fell into the life-boat's crew, his little hands were seen once, twice, lifted above the waves. The life-boat again dashed towards him, but it was too late; a sea sank while his last cry was heard through the roar and tumult of the wind—he did not rise again. The life-boat was hauled back to the land, with the five men whom it had saved from death.

During the past year, 417 lives (besides seventeen vessels) were saved by the life-boats of the National Institution alone, and nearly a 200 by shore-boats and other means, for which it granted rewards. A sum of £1,797 was expended by the institution in rewards; and £13,819 on its various establishments round the coasts of the British Isles. It claims our particular attention at this season, when the equinoctial gales are warning us of the approach of winter. A liberal augmentation of its pecuniary resources is needed to render its operations co-extensive with the urgent requirements of our coasts. This assisted, it will be in a position to accomplish, in the fullest measure, the beneficial and sacred objects for the sake of which it was established, now more than forty years ago; and in the furtherance of which it has hitherto laboured with no small amount of success. We may here observe that the quarterly Number of The Life-boat, or journal of the Royal National Life-boat Institution, for Oct. 1, which has just been published, contains a reduced copy of the "Wreck-Chart of the British Isles" for 1863, showing by a series of black dots the number of shipwrecks in each part, respectively, of our narrow seas; with a careful statistical analysis of the last return of the Board of Trade upon this most interesting subject. It appears that the number of casualties, including collisions, reported on the coasts of the United Kingdom during the twelvemonth was 2001, the number in 1862 having been rather more than 1800. was 2001, the number in 1862 having been rather more than 1800. was 2001, the number in 1862 having been rather more than 1800.

the Aurora answered the salute, and this was an additional grace of the safe arrival of the party. Neither the reports from the fort nor from the Aurora could be heard, but the successive flashes had in the distance exactly the effect of sheet lightning, illuming for a second one whole quarter of the sky and then dying away into shadow as only Heine knew how. For a time, though cheering could be heard rolling loudly along the banks of the stream, it was impossible to make out anything of the Osborne. At last a range of white lights held along the vessel's side revealed clearly what was taking place. The largest pinnace had been lowered and manned, and into this their Royal Highnesses and the Prince Consort, the members of their respective suites, English and Swedish, had already descended and taken their places, and were now being rowed towards the shore.

THE LANDING AND ARRIVAL AT THE PALACE.

The crowd of spectators on the quay presently saw the Royal visitors approach. A capacious ship's boat, with flags fore and aft, holding a company of some forty, consisting partly of ladies and partly of officers in full uniform, was manned every way with the oar of all but noiseless oars, though deep shadow into the welcome glare of the torches. The quay reached and took on terra firma, it was but a step to the carriages; and, as the members successively of the Royal family took their places in them, running footmen, with flambeaux, dashed to the front, the quaintly-costumed horsemen galloped at their side, the coaches themselves tore off at speed, and an exciting spectacle was presented. This is the subject of one of our illustrations. The torchlight procession, for such it was, from the quay to the palace, was indeed a certain sight. The "Charles the Twelfth" sounds are the most antiquated in appearance of any troops in Europe, some of them wear the same broad-cut blue coats, looped up in the same fashion, faced with the same yellow facings, and accompanied by the same three-cornered hats, as the ambitious conqueror ran on parade-grounds and battle-fields one number. These mounted warriors were followed by officials, also on horseback, and also strangely regarded, carrying flambeaux. Carriages and four, the first being escorted by guards, followed, and were quickly passing through the entrance-gates of the palace, to the quick, sharp hurrahs which are the common form of popular welcome or approval. The courtyard of the palace was crowded with people. The military band played "God save the Queen" immediately on reaching the palace, the first act of the Prince of Wales was to telegraph to the Queen his safe arrival, and the Royal party took up their residence in Stockholm. A suite of apartments of extreme magnificence, adjoining the sumptuous hall-room of the palace, had been prepared for the Prince and Princess; and these were the rooms for which they landed. They are on the third floor, where it might be expected that the grandeur of the rooms would be somewhat less conspicuous than that of the lower stories; but it does not appear to be so; at all events, the rooms are made so as to lodge the distinguished visitors in the portion of the palace most convenient to the illustrious subjects in the Swedish dynasty. The marble staircase is of noble proportions, and brings you up by each step to a sense of the grandeur that you have reached the first floor, and you are surprised to see from the windows the largest public thoroughfare running beneath. These at a large waiting-chamber, or entrance-room, opening on the right from the staircase landing; next to this is another waiting-room, unexpected, and not fully furnished as the second; and then this is very beautifully fitted in peculiar pink chintz-pattern satin coverings, and the adjoining sinking saloon, which opens by folding glass doors to the magnificent under-ground-room of the Princess. Her Royal Highness's bed-room is the next apartment, and in beauty of proportion and splendour of fitting and furniture stands in the gem of the whole suite of rooms. The bedstead, with its crimson tabored Brussels curtains, broadly embroidered with gold lace, is a study itself. The pillows are covered in magnificent white satin, and the coverlet is composed of the richest Brussels. There are two statues of white marble in this gorgeous chamber—one of Charles XII., the other of Charles John Bernadotte, with his crowned portrait and the corresponding statue, a contrasting one by means giving indication of greatness or strength of character, although of course the fame of the latter is in many ways as considerable as that to have acquired so eminent a position not only in arms but amongst the sovereigns of Europe. Passing from the bed-room to the chamber of the Princess is a room elegantly fitted up for the lady in attendance on her Royal Highness; and opening on the right is a most prettily-decorated room, fitted up as a boudoir, and which is the favourite place of the grand staircase, and entering on the left, we come to the suite of rooms occupied by the Prince of Wales, which are in every sport and separated from those of the Princess, an arrangement not very suitable to so loving and attached a couple, but which shows the amount of accommodation in this immense palace. The first room entered on the way to the Prince's apartments is the hall-room, superb in its dimensions and decorations, but a slight degree too much in character of proportion. This opens into a palatial quadrilateral, where four rooms are strongly grouped together. The anteroom opens into the Prince's drawing-room; and inside, the most beautiful apartment of all, which has been fitted up as the bed-room of his Royal Highness. It is a square room of lofty proportions, with a gracefully-coved ceiling. At one end is the bust of the present King, Charles XV., and at the other opposite to it that of Bernadotte, the plainest piece of furniture in the room is the bedstead, but it is only so comparatively, for when closely examined it is handsome and unique, with its heavy draperies of rich velvet of dark crimson colour. A splendid coverlet and satin pillows, similar to those of the Princess, are seen when the closed curtains are drawn aside. On the right, the sleeping-chamber is another retiring-room, fitted with writing-tables and all the conveniences necessary for composition, and the other private rooms were superb to view. What most their splendour have been when they were one blaze of light, with all the intermediate doors thrown open, on the moment of the Royal personages arrival, and the homeliness of the quiet Danish palaces, where they had so recently resided, must have made the contrast the more remarkable; but when excepting the Riddersal, or the great banquet saloon, at Christiansborg, which is probably the finest hall in the world.

VISIT TO THE PRINCESS AT STOCKHOLM.

The members of the Royal circle and suite assembled with as little delay as possible after their arrival at dinner in the castle. The dinner was not, as we have said, a state banquet. In the interval between the King and Queen of Denmark, the Prince and Princess of Wales, Prince Oscar, and the Queen Dowager of Sweden, members of the Danish Minister, representing the King of Denmark, dined—a purely Royal party—by themselves. In the entry room with the members of the Royal suites, with the English Chargé-d'Affaires and secretary, dined. About ten o'clock, the leading members of the Court having in the mean time dressed for the evening, the Royal party made a visit to the theatre, where they arrived in time to see the last act of the French version of "The Bohemian Girl." The theatre, in Sweden is much larger and of a more ornamental character than the Hof Theatre at Copenhagen. Five tiers of boxes rise one above the other to the ceiling, the decorations being profusely gilt and white, and in the case of the stage-boxes there is a curious arrangement, by which the size of the proscenium is reduced, and in that of a larger Order of Things, the occupant for the time being presents to the audience the appearance of but an individual, and not a group of persons in a box. The audience rose immediately on the entrance of the Royal party, and the orchestra performed the National Anthem, which we could perceive our own as to the air, though undistinguishable. Etiquette, on such occasions, is opposed to any other manifestations. The King's Box is in the centre, and is to a seat all filled by the Prince of Wales in like manner brought in the Queen Dowager, Princess Oscar conducting the Queen of Sweden, and Prince Oscar the King were the uniform of the Hussars of Charles XV., of which regiment he is the proprietor, with the decorations of the Seraphim, of St. Olaf, and of the Freemasons. The Prince of Wales wore a General's uniform, with a ribbon of the Bath. The three ladies in the Royal box were simple wreaths of flowers, the Queen and the Princess of Wales being dressed in blue with white lace, the Queen Dowager in mauve with white lace, having moreover, mauve ribbons twined into her wreath. At the close of the National Anthem there was a flourish of trumpets, during which the King stood and bowed repeatedly. The Royal family seemed much gratified with this graceful act of the performances which they had the opportunity of seeing. The Prince of Wales manifested satisfaction in the English manner by smiling and looking pleased. The King, on the contrary, freely kept time to each passages of the music as he most approved, directing the attention of his visitors apparently to morceaux of special excellence. Both on the entrance and on the departure the Royal party were loudly cheered in the streets.

THE ROYAL PARTY VIEWING STOCKHOLM FROM THE MOSEBACKE GARDENS.

The morning after their Royal Highnesses' arrival at Stockholm (Tuesday) was devoted to a promenade for the purpose of viewing that city and its environs. The King of Sweden accompanied the Prince of Wales in a handsome mail-phaeton, while the Queen of Sweden and the Princess of Wales sat in an open carriage. Prince Oscar of Sweden driving a carriage of his own, and the ladies and gentlemen of both Courts following in several other vehicles, the Royal party set out on their excursion. The drive commenced with that called the Mosebacke, which commands a magnificent prospect. From this level almost of the sea, upon which, as in Venice, the majority of houses in Stockholm seem to rest, this hill shoots up suddenly to a considerable height. It is richly covered with buildings which rise terrace above terrace, until at the summit there is a small pleasure-ground and tea-garden, affording a view of many miles in all directions, a spot so highly prized by residents that the name given to it signifies "the mountain of Moses." Any monarch might be proud of having such a capital to show, and the King, with evident pleasure, pointed out to the Prince and Princess from the pavilion, or raised orchestra, in the Mosebacke Gardens, many interesting localities which are associated with historical traditions. Ancient Stockholm—although the pile island—lies in what can still be recognised as the Lake Mälar; but its building now extend far beyond that ground. Some centuries over the surrounding islets, till the whole is so looped together and tangled with bridges that, as you approach, you cannot tell where the islands are longer to distinguish the natural course of the stream from the artificial inclosures that science or commerce has created. Lake Mälar stretches away to the west, and is lost to the sight in the deep-water channel or bay winds towards the sea, the view for miles in both directions being of water up and beneath hilly, wooded, and minor sheets of water that the eye does not fix itself, as in other scenes, upon some few prominent objects, but ranges, delighted, over the whole landscape. The sky is blue, the air fresh, the sun and stagnant, but fresh and teeming with fish, are covered with vessels perpetually passing in all directions. Steamers, under these circumstances. Directly in front of the wooden platform on which they stood the Royal party saw the river Norrström, whose narrow harbour was as brightly blue as the clear morning sky overhead. In addition to the crowds of small vessels and commercial craft, which, even in snow bore on its broad bosom the three English vessels which had brought the Prince and his suite. Beyond is the island of Sheppsholm, united to the city by a handsome bridge. Beyond this bridge lies the inner harbour, which is on the left of the Royal party, is mainly dockyard, with a range of bright red sheds on its harbour side. Beyond it, and at the island on which the city stands, completely covered with buildings ornamented with spires and roped all round with noble quays, beside which ships are lying, and over which the Royal party saw the streets of the city filled more than all the houses of the city, amongst which it seems from this point of view to be literally piled, and the numerous spires and towers amongst the sea. Beyond the city lies the northern town, and you can easily distinguish Prince Oscar's palace, the opera-house, and the line of the principal streets. Still further to the left, on the main, Malar lake stretches away to the westward, and small sails dot its surface as far as you can see, while the distance is finally bounded by the Baltic caves out of sight among the wooded islands, and far in the distance is the open sea, which is known to be fringed by dark pine forests looking almost black on the horizon under the bright blue sky. This morning I could see the King pointing with his walking-stick to the various objects in the landscape, explaining the view to the Prince and Princess of Wales. I do not remember to have seen more of it, and of all the panoramic view which enabled him to show his guests the beauties of his noble capital. It is far away in the north; it contains a small population, and it is not known to the general tourist, who goes in crowds to German cities which have not a tithe of its attractions; but the King of Sweden may be proud of it, and the Prince of Wales of the visit he has taken his voyage in vain. Most assuredly the tourist who goes to Stockholm will not be disappointed in the capital, which has not anywhere a rival in its own peculiar style of beauty."

Having gazed long enough at this fine prospect from the Mosebacke Gardens, the Royal party drove through the principal streets, and returned to the town, where they visited the different palaces and museums, the Riddarhus or House of Lords, the Riddarholm church, and several other public buildings, resting for an hour at the palace of Prince Oscar, with whom they lunched.

THE BANQUET AT THE HOUSE OF NOBILITY.

In the evening of the same day, the Prince and Princess of Wales, with the King and Queen of Denmark, were entertained by the King of Sweden with a grand dinner at the Riddarhus Castle of Tricksholm, which lies about six miles from the capital. The drive from Stockholm lies for a portion of the way through richly-wooded parks, having quite the appearance of English parks, and on leaving the high road, it reaches some gardens kept in the English style, on the edge of which is observed a beautiful lake, with the open sea and the sea. These are immediately under the windows of the castle, and only separated from it by the drive before the grand entrance, in the centre of which is a handsome fountain. The dinner-party, which was having entered the palace, found the semblance of the grand staircase occupied by a guard of honour, and the Royal suite in the grand reception-room is fitted up as an armoury, and bears upon the walls a variety of weapons, such as are common to Europe, blue and yellow, being those peculiar to Royalty in Sweden. Curious weapons and entire suites of armour meet the eye in all corners of the room. In the centre, opposite the entrance, and in personal welcome to the more distinguished guests, stood the King of Sweden, in a handsome looking suit of armour, with a long white beard. Beyond the armoury, rich velvet curtains, half dropped and half looped up, disclosed the entrance to a suite of apartments of an ordinary manner, in which the lady guests paid their court to the Queen and some presentations were made to the Prince and Princess of Wales. At seven o'clock the Royal party entered the dining-room, Danneberg was swan by all gentlemen in possession of the Order; and both Princes being in possession of the highest Order of Knighthood in Sweden, which had been presented to him that morning. In 1854, when the Prince was in the service with the allies, leading her to a course favourable to the Allies rather than to Russia, the Order was conferred, as an exceptional favour, upon the late Prince Consort; and it has now been conferred on his son. At six o'clock dinner was announced, and the King of Sweden led in the Princess of Wales, his Royal Highness following with the Queen of Denmark, and the whole party followed in succession, and then the general company took their places at table. The dining-room had been fitted up and furnished in accordance with the plans of the King himself, and the whole entertainment is limited as to size, the effect produced is singularly pleasing. On a height a little greater than that of ordinary men a mahogany panelling, with a deep ledge or rim round the top, skirts the room. This ledge is filled with curious wase of every description, principally drinking horns or mugs, ranged as closely together as possible, many of them being of priceless value, from the fact that they are relics of antiquity, discovered in various parts of the King's dominions. Above the panelling the wall is papered with a species of Japanese design, which is of a most pleasing character, and the ceiling is painted in more than the spaces necessary for allowing this pattern to be seen, hanging-swords, daggers, medallions, and other souvenirs of the chase may be said to drape the walls. Massive silver candelabra on the tables, small chandeliers of gold suspended from the ceiling, and modern pastrilles in clusters of light in the recesses, gave to the scene all the brilliance that it needed without necessitating the noxious heat of gas. At the principal table no one had a seat who was not either a member of the Royal family or directly attached in some capacity to those having places there as of right. The general company, however, included about one hundred of the Swedish nobility and other persons of rank. Behind the Royal table stood a favourite negro servant, and also four servants in the extraordinary caps which in bygone days distinguished the King's running footmen. The main feature in their attire consists of a large quilly ornament of silver lace, from which a couple of gigantic coloured feathers, some four feet high, spring like the air. The chain worn was also very magnificent; the dinner, with the dessert, comprised twenty courses. The King's own band played a choice selection of music. As dinner ended, the palace grounds, to the edge of the lake, were brilliantly illuminated, and the Royal party, as they moved from the table to the saloon adjoining where supper and refreshments were served, had an opportunity of admiring the beautiful effect from the window.

On the next morning (Wednesday) the Prince of Wales rode with the King of Denmark to the review-ground, a short distance from the city, to witness the movements of a body of Lancers of the Guard, the only cavalry regiment at this moment in Stockholm, except his Majesty's favourite Chasles XII. troop. The King of Sweden, in person, reviewed this regiment, and the Prince, wearing his uniform as Colonel of the 10th Hussars, rode at his side.

THE BALL AT THE PALACE OF THE QUEEN DOWAGER OF SWEDEN.

In the afternoon there was a private dinner, confined to the Royal circle, their immediate attendants, and members of the Diplomatic Corps. On the same evening there was a great ball at the residence of the Queen Dowager of Sweden, the Palace of Drottningholm. This building stands on the edge of the Malar Lake, and is approached from Stockholm across a long bridge. The palace is large, but constructed with movable portions, so as to admit of the passage of steamers right up to the door. On the night of the Queen Dowager's ball, the bridge and the road for some distance were lighted up with bowls filled with a blazing resinous mixture, supported on pillars at regular intervals. The grounds of the castle and their colonnades and the principal walks indicated by a similar illumination. Steamers which had brought company from the city were moored in the bay off the landing-pier where flights of stone steps gave admission to the series of terraces, connected by double staircases of exquisite green marble, wide enough for eight persons to walk abreast, and terrace leading to a suite of apartments right and left. It would be tedious to describe in detail the rooms of the palace thrown open for receiving. Let the reader imagine a series of princely rooms, furnished in exquisite taste and magnificence, and of lofty and well-proportioned size, and he will have formed an estimate of the interior of Drottningholm. The ball-room is distinguished by the series of valuable portraits to which it owes its name of the "Ball Room of Gustavus the Third's Ofncer." With the exception of two half-length pictures, one of which represents the Queen Dowager, and above the entrance to the ball-room, these likenesses are all on the same grand scale as that of her Majesty Queen Victoria, by Winterhalter, a copy of which occupies a prominent place at the upper end of the room. The collection owed its origin to a desire to commemorate the Treaty of 1814, which was signed at the palace by the modern political history of Sweden. One of our illustrations shows this fine apartment as it was in the goodly crowd in the ball-room. The Prince of Wales is in the centre, leading the Queen Dowager; the King of Sweden to our right, having on his arm the Princess of Wales; next, Prince Oscar, with a grand array of medals, including all the personages of distinction in the room, and the Princess of Wales. The Queen Dowager wore a rich silk dress of deep mauve colour, trimmed with white lace, and a tiara of cameos and diamonds; the Queen, a sea-green dress, also trimmed with white lace, and a tiara of diamonds; the Princess of Wales, a white dress, and a necklace and head-dress of diamonds worn by her Royal Highness were drawn from the rich store she has inherited on the occasion of her marriage. With the exception of the officers belonging to the Royal household, the guests appeared in simple evening costume. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales wore the collar of the Garter, and also his left breast, together with the ribbon of the Order of the Seraphim. About twelve o'clock their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, having first inscribed their names in the album at the request of her Majesty the Queen Dowager, descended, with other members of the Royal family, followed by the general company, to supper, which was laid out in apartments under the ball-room suite. These were richly decorated with tapestry and painted panels, and that would well have repaid inspection, but it was difficult under the circumstances to concentrate attention on their merits. In the supper-room devoted to the accommodation of the Royal party, the tables were covered with plate of his illustrious visitors. The general company were invited to drink the healths of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

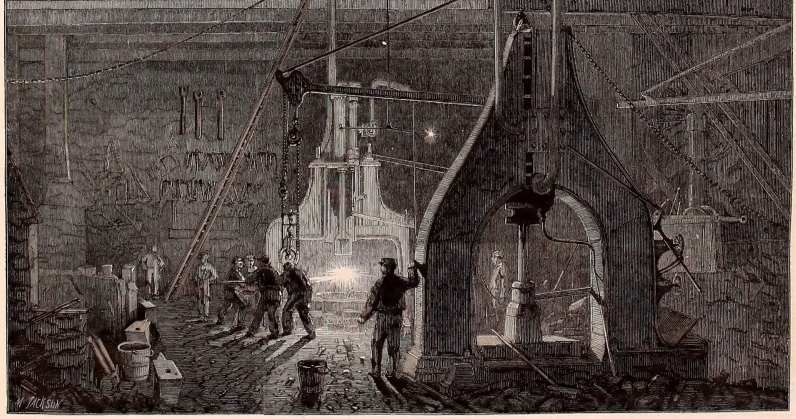
We may give next week some magnificent entertainments at the Swedish Court.

THE DEFENCES OF RICHMOND.—Richmond, according to the best sources of information at the disposal of the Federals, is to be risoned by about ten thousand troops, commanded by General Ewell. These troops are posted to the north and around the city, occupy five intrenched lines, and are considered a sort of noodeus, around which, in case of disaster, the remnant of their army is to rally. The first line is about three miles from the quartering of the garrison is partly in barracks and the remainder in tents, which have been pitched for the last few weeks. The line is also protected by several detachments guarding the several approaches not at present discussed by the main army. The fifth line, which is now extending towards the east, is guarded by a considerable force, which is posted on the north bank of the James River.

The defences of Richmond are naturally strong, and artificial many of the main avenues of attack. On the north side of the city, at there is no expectation at the present time that capture will be attempted and is encamped in open fields. On the west the city defences are the easy approaches. On the south, the position lies south of Richmond and Petersburg. Strong bodies are also stationed at Drury's and Chapin's Bluffs, on the James River, below the city, and on the north bank of the river, each of this army is about 40,000 men, and is the best-disciplined of all the rebel armies. The description will be of interest to the commercial community, and to those who have invested their capital in Confederate securities. This fact and the superior advantage of moving upon interior lines alone have thus far saved the rebel army from destruction. Lee's army is now better clothed and armed than ever. The clothing is especially praised by the men, and is of indefatigable benefit to marches or Wilmington, and is of English manufacture. Arms are now had in abundance, and consist principally of Enfield rifles, which are in the possession supply of said artillery. The great source of well-founded fear is in the excellent condition of the artillery. A dispatch of a portion of the gunboats at Augusta, Georgia, has occasioned a reduction in the supply to such a degree that as little ammunition as can be used is in contemplation. Besides a large number of the poorer class of women are engaged at the Government manufactories in making cartridges. The rebel engineers are also kept in active employment in producing material of war, such as shot, shell, torpedoes, &c. Within the last month new sets of tools and works are kept running night and day. It is computed that 5000 blacks and whites are employed on these works. We may add that a number of Union deserters are among the number. Old forts are being strengthened by a line of rifle-pits, and new ones are being built on the slope; embrasures are being doubly secured by gabions and fascines; ditches are being deepened, and, in fact, nothing that, a little more thickness, or a little more depth in the order of the day. Not only are old works being improved, but new ones are in course of creation, and forts are being connected by chains of breastworks where hitherto none existed. New magazines are also rapidly being completed, and a number of wells have been, or are to be, sunk in different localities, for both convenience and the certain occurrence of a supply of water. It is evident, from the immense amount of labour which has been bestowed within the past two months upon the defences of the rebel city, especially upon the inner line, that they do not entertain any credit the belief that a few weeks may witness a still greater limitation of their field of operations. The Confederate capital is being converted into a perfect fortress, and the engineers—New York Herald.

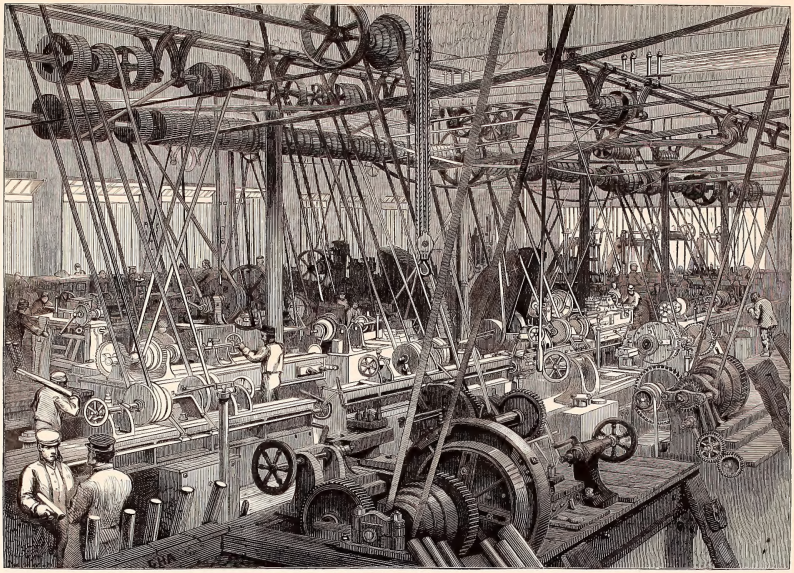
STEPHENSON'S LOCOMOTIVE MANUFACTORY AT NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.

SINCE the invention of printing, no discovery has been made that has exercised so great a change and produced such remarkable and beneficial results to the whole human race as has the introduction of railways and that of steam-carriages. By steam-locomotive power distance has been comparatively annihilated, and, in conjunction with steam navigation, it has practically reduced the dimensions of the earth; for it has brought places previously far apart near to each other, as distance must be measured by time and not by mileage. The progress of mechanical science during the last half century has been most extraordinary—greater during that period than in the previous 500 years; for seventy years ago there neither existed steam engines that had rotatory motion, steam-ships, nor steam-boats; neither locomotive engines nor railways; neither spinning, weaving, nor manufacturing machines, except such simple ones as were worked by hand, beside the corn-mills, saw-mills, and a few others worked by water power, which occupied almost the exclusive attention of the engineers of that day, or, as they were then called, millwrights. Neither did the engineers of that time possess any of those beautiful mechanical contrivances called machine tools, with which they now produce with such facility the splendid specimens of mechanical contrivance constantly turned out by the makers of locomotives, marine engines, and machines for executing the most elaborate operations necessary for producing textile fabrics, and performing thousands of other important operations; bettering, cheapening, multiplying, and distributing to the millions of all nations those things which are necessary, useful, or ornamental. With the names of the great inventors of these things should always be associated those of such men as Bramah, Maudsley, Naasmyth, Whitworth, and others; for without the aid they have given to mechanics the inventions of such men as Watt, Arkwright, and Stephenson never could have been fully developed as they have been, or in so short a time. To estimate this properly, we recommend our readers to visit the exceedingly interesting collection of mechanical objects in the Museum of Patents at South Kensington. There, grouped together, will be found some of the most interesting illustrations of the progress of mechanical science that may be seen anywhere. There is the steam-cylinder of the first passenger steam-boat that ever plied in England; and something older, the first engine ever put into a steam-boat, the first condensing steam-engine, the first screw-propeller, with many others. Surely these are rare antiquities, precious relics of great discoveries! That group of old blackened beams of wood, rusty cylinders of iron, and cogged wheels, on the east side of the building, is the identical old engine to which Watt first applied the results of his "happy thought," the separate condenser. On the south side of the Museum are a couple of locomotive engines—old, very old—worn, bent, bruised, and rusty, but full of interest; for one is the oldest locomotive engine in existence, the parent of all that have since been produced—the original old "Puffing Billy" of the Wylam Colliery, constructed there, in 1813, by William Hedley, for Christopher Blackett, whose name will ever be remembered as one of the earliest and staunchest friends of the locomotive. This "Puffing Billy" was not the first engine of Mr. Blackett. He had tried Trevethick's and other inventions, and had been nearly blown up several times, but at last this homely-looking, sturdy machine was perfected, and from that date (1813) up to a comparatively recent period it has been dragging (very slowly, it is true) heavy loads of coals and waggons to and fro. It has a battered, and bruised, and hard-worn look, with indubitable marks of extreme old age about it; but it was a good, hard-working, willing drudge, and has well earned the quiet time it will have in future, here in the Kensington Museum. Upon one side of it hangs a document, dated 1815, from which it appears some great objection had been made by local landowners to the puffing propensities of the aforesaid "Billy," and a case is referred for opinion to a barrister named Williams, whose opinion is that there is no objection arising from the lease itself to Mr. Blackett conveying his coal waggons by means of this steam-engine; but he thinks that the use of such an engine may be deemed a nuisance, if the smoke or noise of the engine disturbs the cattle grazing on the lands adjacent to the waggon-way. The locomotive have a narrow escape of being put down as a common nuisance. We might now as easily think of putting down earthquakes or eruptions of volcanoes, as putting down the locomotive engine, but in those days it was different, and had an extinguisher been put on "Puffing Billy" at that time, the introduction of locomotives and railways for passenger traffic might have been delayed many years. Beside this venerable specimen of mechanical ingenuity stands another locomotive engine, worn, bruised, strained, and cracked like its neighbour, but not so old as Puffing Billy, which dates as far back as 1813, while this did not come into existence until the year 1829. These engines are well placed side by side, for the spectator may, by looking at them in such a position, easily come to several important conclusions. In designing the old engine it is evident that its inventor never dreamed of any speed worth thinking of. To crawl along with a heavy load behind it was all that this engine was expected to do, and it did this patiently, but with a great deal of fuss and clatter, for half a century; and for such a performance, and considering its extreme old age, it is entitled to our highest respect. But, turning to its neighbour, we see that its inventor and constructor did think of high speed; there is a wonderful look of speed about it, and it did actually travel at forty miles per hour, for it is the celebrated "Rocket" engine of George Stephenson, the parent engine of our present locomotive system. This is really a very interesting relic, for it was the great starting-point of high speed and passenger railways. It is extraordinary how thoroughly George Stephenson grasped his subject at once. It is not only in this case that an important principle was introduced; the entire engine has a character throughout that shows that the mind of the great inventor comprehended the entire subject; and although since the time this machine was tested on the Manchester and Liverpool Railway, in 1830, so many of the most skilful mechanics in the world have been constructing engines by thousands for similar purposes, yet at the present moment all these engines now in use, in all parts of the world, in their general characteristics, bear the stamp of the mind of George Stephenson upon them.



THE HOUSE IN WHICH GEORGE STEPHENSON WAS BORN, AT WYLAM, NEAR NEWCASTLE.

Our first illustration is a view of the house in which George Stephenson was born. It is a small red-tiled cottage—one such as are inhabited by working men in the colliery districts. It is two-storied, and contains four apartments, the walls unplastered, with the bare joists overhead, and the floor of clay, the father of the locomotive system was born. This house is situated at the eastern extremity of the village of Wylam, a small, poor village on the north bank of the Tyne, surrounded with blast-furnaces, collieries, cinder-banks, and coal-heaps. It was here that George Stephenson passed his childhood, played about beside the waggon-road, went bird-nesting, and ran errands to the village; but he did not go to school; his parents were too poor, and bread too dear, to pay even the small amount necessary to send him to school, and so the first eight years of his life were passed. Thirty-five years after, in conjunction with Mr. Edward Pease, he founded the present locomotive manufactory at Newcastle, of the interior of which we this week give some illustrations.



Mr. Smiles has most happily given to the world an account of how those thirty-five years of George Stephenson's life were passed. He has traced with a loving hand the career of his hero, from the days when, as a boy, he herded cows on the Wylam waggon-way; when, a youth, he tried hard to recover the lost time of his childhood, by learning his letters and making pothooks and hangers; showing how, afterwards, he became a skilful breakman, and then an enginewright; and, for amusement, a shoemaker and clockmaker; eventually an improver of pumping-engines, the inventor of the miner's safety-lamp, a constructor of locomotives, and a designer and builder of hundreds of miles of railways.

The celebrated locomotive-works at Newcastle, now carried on by George Robert Stephenson, his nephew, include the premises in Forth-street, first occupied by George Stephenson. They were originally very small, and all the work had to be done by sheer skill and hard labour, for tools were few and simple in those days. Gradually these works have so increased in size and ability to execute orders, that they can now turn out a splendid new locomotive engine and tender of the largest size every week. They, therefore, deservedly rank amongst the largest engineering establishments in England, and they have been, moreover, a school for mechanics, who have disseminated in all parts of the world the knowledge here obtained.

The present works are of an extensive character, covering a great extent of ground, and contain large numbers of all the machine tools now in use for forging, shaping, and completing all the parts of locomotive engines. First is the foundry, where large masses of metal are melted into shape by casting; but the forge in a locomotive manufactory is a far more important workshop than a foundry, and here forging is carried on with the ears, skill, and intelligence that human minds and hands are capable of applying to it; for upon the completeness, truth, and perfection of the forging depends nearly certain parts of the locomotive, the safety of the passengers depends. The engine wheels, as might be expected, are objects of especial care, for upon the regularity, precision, and upright parts of each of these wheels to the other until a perfect wheel is produced, the quality of every portion of it being thereafter tested. The boilers, upon which we so much depended upon for bearing the sudden vibrations, strains, and jars it must be constant subject to in working at the terrific velocities now attained by some of our express-trains.

Our first illustration of the manufactory is a night view of that portion of the forging department containing the Bessemer steel-hammers, which are used to hammer into shape the largest portions of the engine, such as the crank-axle. The forging of large masses of iron was a great difficulty with the older mechanics, and numberless contrivances were adopted to avoid the necessity of using them. Now the most colossal masses of metal can be forged to the desired shape with as much ease as fifty years ago a smith would have made a spring of a few pounds weight.

The construction of the locomotive boilers, as may be expected, is a large and important division of the manufactory. Here the eternal din of "clinking rivets up" is constantly maintained. Material and workmanship are here even more important than in the manufactories for the steel work. The boilers are composed of plates of iron, punched carefully riveted together, and afterwards subjected to the most severe tests. For the quality of this portion of the engine Messrs. Stephenson manufactory has always borne the highest character—the principle upon which it is constructed as well as its form having been given to it by the celebrated founder of the establishment.

Our second Illustration represents, as well as a wood-engraving can render such a subject, a portion of the lathe and tool shop. Here are machines and tools of every kind for turning, boring, cutting, slotting, drilling, planing, and shaping pieces of metal into every conceivable form. Their variety is extraordinary, and they are packed closely together that a stranger is unable to distinguish the crowd of machines and contrivances, although the whole interior of these workshops as a person ignorant of geography may look upon a map of a continent, are not unlike such a mass of closely-packed lines. Yet there is no real confusion. Every separate part is busily engaged in producing a separate portion of an engine, without which the grand result a noble locomotive, would not be perfect.

Our third illustration is a view of the large building called "the fitting shop." It is here that, after the various component parts of locomotive have been constructed and finished, each in its separate department, all are brought together and placed in their proper relative position by a highly skilled class of workmen, called fitters. Under the hands of these men the locomotive grows rapidly; the frame is put together; the wheels and axles mounted; the cranks and crank-axle and cylinder occupy their proper position; piston-rods, connecting-rods, eccentrics, and reversing-gear follow, with all the smaller portions, until a complete and perfect engine is produced.

RAILWAYS IN WALES.

The progress of the railway system, over England in Wales to the present time, has been to give the Principality three great lines of railway, running east and west, from the English border to the sea, with numerous lines extending from the Welsh and English borders from Chester to Ogmore and Newport, and several narrow gauge, some of which are likely to be extended, step by step, until they also become great trunk lines, and form the outline of a complete system of railways communicating with Ireland throughout the whole Principality.

The four great lines which are already completed are :—1st, the line from Chester, along the coasts of Flint, Denbigh, and Carnarvon, and through the Island of Anglesea to the sea at the Menai Straits; 2nd, the line from Shrewsbury along the valleys of the Severn and the Dovey, and through the counties of Montgomery and Cardigan to the sea, at the prosperous little town and place of Aberystwith; 3rd, the line from Gloucester, through the counties of Monmouth (once part of Wales), Glamorgan, Carmarthen, and Pembroke, to the sea at the noble haven of Milford; and, 4th, the line from Chester to Chepstow and Newport, which runs through the Welsh counties of Flint and Denbigh, as well as the English counties of Chester, Shropshire, Hereford, and Monmouthshire, and is destined to communicate with Ireland after and with the whole railway system of England.

Another great line is in progress, which is intended to reach from the English border to the sea, up the valley of the Dee. This line commences at Ruabon, from the English border, and is intended to be carried, at present, in the course of the present year, the works being finished except about thirty yards of tunnelling near the Llangollen terminus. From Corwen the line is to be carried up the valley of the Dee to Bala and its beautiful lake, from which the river issues. On this part of the line the Corwen and Bala lines are open, and the greater part of the land has been secured. The promoters of the Corwen and Bala line also intend to continue their railway from Bala to Festiniog, and from that charming place to the sea at Portmadoc. When the whole of this line is completed, Wales will possess a complete line of railway, running from the English border to the sea; and a fifth line, extending along the whole length of North Wales.

But one of not two trunk lines, extending from north to south, are also required for the entire development of the railway system of Wales, as all the lines from the English border to the sea with each other. This is still the great difficulty to overcome. The difficulty arises from the circumstance that nearly all the Welsh valleys and all the Welsh mountain chains run from east to west, and must therefore be crossed by any line running from north to south. This is a serious difficulty even on the Welsh border, where the mountains are not more than 1000 ft. high; it becomes greater in the central parts of Wales, where the mountains rise to the height of from 1000 ft. to 2000 ft.; and is again lessened in North Wales, where, in Snowdon, where the mountains rise to the height of 3600 ft. to 3800 ft., Snowdon, the highest of all, towering to the height of 3721 ft. The great value of Holyhead is, it has already been conquered at several points, and is will ultimately to be completely overcome as to give a line of railway from south to north. It will be overcome, as all similar difficulties are overcome in the country and business of the industrial principle of association. There are already two or three railways opened or far advanced which will very nearly accomplish the object.

A person wishing to travel by railway from Holyhead to Milford Haven without going out by the English border would only have to go as far as the line. From Holyhead to Corwen there is an uninterrupted line of railway by going by the line of Chester, and this will soon be completed. From Corwen to a gap of from twenty to twenty-five miles from Bala to Machynlleth, at which point Aberystwith and Aberystwith line is situated, there is some difficulty in making connection with Newcastle Emlyn. There the South Wales system of railways is reached, which runs to Milford Haven. We are no reason to doubt that these gaps will be filled up before long, and then a complete line of railway will be open from north to south, by which there will be an uninterrupted railway communication from every part of North Wales to every part of South Wales, and from every part of Wales to England.

In respect to Ireland, the Welsh railways possess the finest, running steamvessels from Holyhead to Dublin, and from Fishguard to Waterford, and will give the Principality a complete system of trunk railways. Many vigorous branches are already growing on one or other of the existing trunks, and will more are beginning to germinate.—Liverpool Mercury.

A bottle thrown into the River Ore at Newton Stewart, Wigtonshire, Scotland, on Dec. 31, 1863, was picked up on the 4th inst. and was picked up in Fleibourne Creek, on the north-eastern coast of the Isle of Wight, on Oct. 5, 1864.

Mr. King, of Avignon, says a French paper, lately lost a portable containing 100,000*f.* A poor man, who knew it to have been found, opened it up, and returned it to him. Mr. King offered him, as a reward, a life annuity of 500*f.*, or 200*f.* down. The man chose the latter, and invested it in a small estate, sufficient for his and his family's support.

The King of the Hellenes has presented to the metropolitan church of Athens a handsome clock, manufactured in Paris. It is also a compensateur, and repeats the quarters on three bells. These dials of ground glass, each 5 ft. 3 in. in diameter, show the hour at night. There is not a word or public clock in Paris having a dial of such large dimensions.

The Indian telegraphs, which connect together Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Delhi, and all the principal towns in India, are advanced eastwards as far as Rangoon, and the same thence to China and to Australia by way of Singapore, Java, and Timor; are almost entirely in comparatively shallow water as far as the submarine part of the line is concerned, "and as the electricity," says Charles Bright, "offer any difficulty which should prevent our having daily telegrams from King George, Melbourne, Sydney Adelaide, and Brisbane within three years from this day."

SPORTS OF THE MONTH.—OCTOBER.

THIS is a glorious month for the sportsman: the fox hunter can devote many hours to cub hunting, while the shooter can revel in pheasant-shooting. None but real lovers of the "noble science" can take a delight in cub-hunting; the early hour, the absence of what has been happily termed the "coffee-room" part of the day's amusement, and the long distances which the brilliant run can be expected, will scarcely repay the Nimrod for "getting out" in the middle of the night, and "before the day is thoroughly aired." Still, many are to be found who never miss a morning with the cubs, and look forward to it with as much anxiety as others do for the more exciting "find" of November. The huntsman's delight in showing cheery and exhilarating in finding oneself once again at the cover's side after the long, bright evening early in October, to see the master's face beaming with health and pleasure, to exchange the usual greeting with a brother sportsman, to discuss with the huntsman the day's prospects, and to see some young hounds "put to" a fox for the well-stocked preserves; to receive the respectful recognition of a bow from the keeper, and to find the day much cheaper at his post, as hale and hearty as during the previous season. As it is bright, gay, and hopeful. The huntsman's horn is heard, followed by the cry of "Yoi-hy-hoo, gone away!" and in about six or twenty minutes every hound is at work, until the "who-hoop!" echoes through the air, the young hounds have been blooded, and another vulpine head is decapitated to grace the kennel-door.

In addition to the above, the foxhunter likes to pass a few hours on the flags, admiring the gallant steeds, or coffee-house, and to read in review order before him; nor is a visit to the stable less satisfactory, where he may ask for and receive advice at the animals that are to carry him through many a severe run.

Turn we to pheasant-shooting:

But if the shady woods my cares employ,
In quest of feathered game, my spaniels beat,
Pausing their sides with panting labour heave,
Push forth the whirring pheasant; high in air
The circling hawk his varied pinions plies,
With hasty wing.

So wrote Somerville, and a more exciting description of pheasant-shooting cannot be imagined. The 1st of October forms a conspicuous epoch in the sportsman's calendar; and, although that day is not looked forward to with the same interest as formerly, it is the 1st of September, still there is something most exhilarating in starting on a fine September morning on the moors, which are tended by Dash and Music—as good a brace of Sussex spaniels as ever flushed a cock or raised a partridge. Every prospect of bagging twelve or fourteen brace of pheasants before the decline of the sun, in the turnips or on thicket with its rich golden lustre. Pheasant-shooting, when the birds are strong on the wing, is not to be sniffed at, and although almost impenetrable, is far from easy work; and a man must be, to adopt a phrase of the late gallant Mansfield, "a perfect shot, a master of the weapon," who can knock over an old cock-pheasant as he sails over the tops of the trees at a railway rate of speed. In this month, the hare is not neglected, but is a good, nothing daunted, the party, which ought not to exceed six guns, with two setters, will find a good day's sport, and if they succeed in a dozen stalwart beaters, must make their way through bushes, brambles, and briar. As to shooting, it is next to impossible; for, though the birds "lie" well, they are so thick and tangled that the sight is lost, it is difficult to raise the gun so as to take an unerring aim. After a time the sportsman gets weary from the heavy bucket, and, somewhere in a line, open spot, where now and then may be seen a stately oak, umbrella light bramble. Then begins the sport. Forming a wide line, they move slowly: Dash gives the cue—"a cock pheasant" rises from the sedges; another succeeds; hares and rabbits dash by; and, before the day is over, the bag is filled out, the brace of brace of pheasants, as many hares, and a few couple of rabbits. Another month must be borne in remembrance. This is a month to be spent with a rook through the turnips, with a brace of steady pointers, to pick up all the outlying birds.

In partridge-shooting dogs are indispensable, and there is great difficulty in obtaining one. At the sale of the late Mr. Morrell's dogs, which took place some years ago, one was sold for 100 guineas, of almost fabulous prices being set upon them. No wonder, too, when we consider that a whole day's sport may be marred by a wild, unsteady dog, which puts up the birds when they are "out of shot," or by its nose mouth, occupies every hare and mutilates every pheasant and partridge that comes within its ken. A well-broken pointer is not such an animal, after damaging the game, will drop it in some hidden spot, which it will be impossible to find, and will then assume a tremendous feat. A good retriever should possess a tender mouth, so as never to ruffle duck or feather; he should be obedient to his master, never straying from his side, and not be afraid of water, but, on the contrary, and courage so as to tap a five-barred gate with a hare or pheasant in his mouth, and not to think of running stream or party-congulant water for any bird that may have dropped into it; and, as Rochester said of himself to the Merry Monarch, the quadruped, like the above precise biped, should "never be shy, never sick, never out of humour." To those in search of such an animal, we would warn them against purchasing a dog which has been "broken" entirely to shot. The precaution of ascertaining who the venders are; for in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred they know a great deal more than they tell. At best way, if there be not a good side of sporting-dogs at Tattersall's, is to inquire of some friend, or some friend's gamekeeper, in whom confidence can be placed, where such a dog is to be met with, or to be sold; and then, bet not the purchaser stand for a few pounds, as, in the end, he will find it the most economical course to pay a fair price for a useful animal that will always realise its price than a smaller one for a useless brute.

Partridge-shooting commenced, and the lover of the "leash" may enjoy his gallop over the downs or attend any of the numerous meetings held for the purpose of coursing. The latter amusement, as all other good animals, are difficult to procure. Still, they are to be found, and the lover of coursing may succeed in the selecting from a good breed. The English greyhound is supposed by naturalists to be a variety of the Irish greyhound, now extremely rare; and there is an evident approach to the latter in the head, the length of the legs, and of the legs, and in the smallness of the muzzle. The difference of colour is also remarkable, the Irish dog being shinner and the English of a cate in shape. The greyhound was formerly held in such high estimation as to be considered the peculiar companion of gentlemen; and, by an ancient law, the King Canute, no person under the degree under that degree should possess a dog more than one. There are many to be found who agree with Gay, that Poor is the triumph o'er the timid hare.

And yet this harmless and inoffensive animal is endowed with many favorite qualities, and is by no means deficient in the higher intellectual faculties. Gifted with the finest sense of hearing and seeing, and being extremely timid, it is constantly employing such senses in search of danger, alarm, and even in the chase often leaves its pursuers behind. The sagacity of the hare in endeavouring to escape from its persecutors is wonderful, and Mr. Daniel positively says he has seen a hare start from its form at the sound of the hunter's horn, run towards the pack, cross the Canine-line distance, plunge into a pond, and swim to some rushes in the middle, where it lay down and concealed itself from the pursuit of the dogs. He mentions another, which, after running two hours before the dogs, pushed a hare from its seat and took possession of it. Others he has seen run into a shepherd's flock, and, when pursued by dogs, instantly take refuge, and escape by mounting on old wall and clapping themselves down in the middle of the ivy which covered it.

The Queen has appointed Edwin Henry Egerton, Esq., Attaché to her Majesty's Embassy at Berlin, to be a third secretary in her Majesty's diplomatic service.

A mole-killer of Monthey, in the Valais, in Switzerland, was recently brought before the Correctional Tribunal, of that place on a charge of excluding his activities, which he effected in an ingenious manner. The destroyers of these animals receive a certain sum for each; but they are not bound to present the latter in order to obtain the reward, but only the tails. The man in question delivered 2000, and received a sum of 80*f.* Surprise was felt at the number, and on close examination a great many were found to be artificial, manufactured by gumming a strip of the animal's skin on a bit of wire covered with paper. The tailmaker was condemned to three months' imprisonment.

COLUMN FOR THE CURIOUS.

IT is not long since we had to congratulate our readers upon the saving of the Bartlow Hills from demolition; this good service to antiquarian research remains to be mainly added to the timely imposition of the Archæological Institute. Probably this good result may have led to some researches of kindred interest near the same quarter, since we learn from an accredited correspondent that the site of the Othona of the Notitia, the long-lost Rhanscester of mediæval writers, is now likely to be determined. For several months past works of reclamation have been carried on at St. Peter's Head, near Bradwell (Broadwater), in Essex, on the shores of the German Ocean; and here, recently, traces of Roman buildings have been observed, the engineer, Mr. Hemans, at once communicated the fact to the Archæological Institute. Mr. Thomas Purnell, the secretary, has since visited the spot and found portions of a wall of great strength, consisting of regular solidity, alternating with rows of herring-bone tiles. In the immediate vicinity the spade has turned up numerous skeletons, doubtless of mediæval interment; besides vestiges of the earlier occupation, consisting of large quantities of Samian and Castor ware, glass beads, and coins of the Lower Empire.

Here is another discovery which has less agreeable complexion. The War Office have proposed to let, for trade and manufacturing purposes, a portion of the barracks and storehouses within the walls of Carlisle Castle, to which the good people of the merry city are much opposed; but what are historical associations to the War Office? Without going back to Roman times, over seven centuries' existence entitles the old place to some respect. It was built by William Rufus, and garrisoned ever since. In 1745, it was maintained as a garrison-fortress until within the last half dozen years, and since the troops have been withdrawn it has been given up to the prisoners when called up for trial, and to the workmen for their head-quarters. Much of the old work of the castle remains, though much of it was taken down in 1835, so that the place has been added at for some time. Now it is advertised to be let! The Carlisle Town Council have very properly remonstrated against the threat of the War, and read him a lesson which, it is hoped, will not be forgotten—that the letting of the castle would be inconsistent with the character of the ancient fortress, and amount to a transfer to the custody of the head-quarters of the county militia which are now at Whitehaven, by which means the desirable saving would be effected both to the Government and the county."

Treasure-trove is everlastingly cropping up, and there is ever and anon a worry over matters of value, but the articles found have no two various for uniform rule. It is suggested that they should be presented to the locality where they were found, or where they were found. In some cases, however, there are rich finds far from any museum, as the celebrated treasure found in the parish of Dorking, in 1817, and nearly 700 in number, 174 of which were presented to the British Museum. If the place has not a museum, then it not to have the coins, and so the hoard increases. Surely the good sense of the Treasury may be trusted in those matters, without such interminable delays as that of the Abergavenny treasure. It will be long before the ploughman or excavator will look to the article and not to the proceeds. Mr. Evans, the well-known antiquary, suggests that so long as no public interest is to subsist where there is with those of the finder—be they those of the Crown, the lord of the manor, or the owner of the soil—they will there be an advantage for him to make sure with the most valuable objects found; or, in case they are preserved intact, to conceal the place of finding, and thus, in many instances, a branch of their scientific value. The only remedy is, to give the finder an indefeasible title to the objects of antiquity which he finds, and to obviate all fear of the concealment of any kind. The Crown would suffer but little by the abolition of its rights—and the case is similar of estates who are interested as antiquities could readily make such arrangements with those employed upon their land as would secure them the offer of any ancient relics which might be found.

Some interesting details have appeared of the contents of the ladychapel of Chichester Cathedral, which has been, for many years past, used as a library. Here, besides valuable old books, with such autographs as those of Archbishop Cranmer and Sir Christopher Hatton, is a collection of relics, including a ring or the gloves of some bishop. It is rather a curious coincidence that this Bishop is the only one whose portrait was omitted from the series in the hall of the old episcopal residence formerly decorated.

In digging the foundations for the tower was recently discovered a Knight's broken bronze spur, which is believed to have belonged to a discovered Knight, whose effigy it was customary for him to have broken off by the Bishop's scullion in the cathedral of the diocese. In this collection, too, are some massive old iron keys of ancient design, and a number of beautiful enamels of the reign of the Stuarts. The only manuscript in the library is a copy of St. Augustine's works, in two folio volumes, on vellum, with red, and black inks, which have wonderfully retained their colour. The MS. is still bound in its original oaken covers.

A correspondent inquires if any imitation of punch took place on the 1st of August last to the pensioners of the Royal Hospital at Greenwich. The Times of Tuesday, August 7, 1866, says that the "1st of August being King George's inauguration, Sir James Thornhill gave to his pensioners a feast of such unusual liberality gallons, which is filled annually upon that day. Every man hath half a pint of punch."

"The Patent Museum," as Mr. Woodcroft's collection of models and machines at South Kensington is improperly called, appears to have been jumped-up without the sanction of Messrs. Chancellors' Court, published. Popular as this exhibition has become during the seven years of its existence, the Commission had nearly negatived its claims upon the head of the Patent Office. The Commissioners were of opinion that for all purposes of the Patent Law a museum of models would be practically useless. The Attorney-General, who, in its nature, too general for the Patent Office: the Committee consider that in future the Commissioners for the office in which it would be necessary to adopt the principle of selection; and such a collection should contain models of moderate size, which should illustrate from recent specifications the progress of the art, an assemblage of models of current patented inventions. The situation of this proposed collection, as well as of the Patent Office Library and Library, remains. A block of ground occupied by old and dilapidated houses, surrounded by handsome new buildings, Chancery-lane, Carrier-street, and Cook's-court, is first recommended by its proximity to the law courts at London's-inn, the line of Court and the new Record Office. Another site proposed immediately adjoins the latter, and extends to the north side of the Record Office. The first of these sites will cost £250,000. Fife House and garden, about two acres, at £52,600 an acre, not next considered—less advantageously. Then a block of land in Victoria-street, for about £60,000, but still less to be recommended. Hedge-square was next named, but not entertained by the Committee, owing to the recent stand made against covering in the business parts of the metropolis." The Committee ultimately recommended the neighbourhood of Chancery-lane as the fittest site.

This paragraph from the Paris letter in the Times is worth preserving :—

The following is the number of persons which the largest churches in Europe will contain :—St. Peter's, Rome, 54,000 ; Cathedral at Milan, 37,000 ; St. Paul's, at London, 25,000 ; Ste. Sophie, at Constantinople, 23,000 ; Notre Dame de Paris, 21,000 ; Cathedral of Pisa, 13,000 ; St. Mark's at Venice, 12,000.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

A Mission to the King of Dahome. By R. F. Burton. (2 vols. Tinsley.) In the summer of the year 1863, Captain R. F. Burton, the pilgrim to Meccinah and Medina, the explorer of the Cameroons Mountains, the wanderer in West Africa, was commissioned by her Majesty's Government to undertake a visit to Gelele, son of Gezo, King of Dahome. It will be recollected, no doubt, that, before the mission intrusted to Captain Burton, Commodore Wilmot had had an interview with his Dahoman Majesty, had expressed friendly sentiments on behalf of the British Government, and had endeavoured to obtain certain concessions with respect to the slave trade, human sacrifices, and the trade of English merchants. It appeared to us that King Gelele had considerably the best of the argument with Commodore Wilmot; but he nevertheless expressed himself willing, so far as he was able with due deference to the prejudices of his people, to meet the views of his correspondent. He promised, to comply with the Commodore's wishes. To Captain Burton then was confided the task of confirming the good understanding which the Commodore appeared to have established with the King, but which naval officers generally find Commodores from strength-ening in person. Captain Burton has therefore published a two elaborate volumes, the result of his mission and the information he was enabled to acquire about Dahomey, its extent, and the manners, manners, and customs of its inhabitants during a three months' personal study. Captain Burton does not appear to have been more successful than Commodore Wilmot in the attainment of his principal object; nor have had the good fortune to please the King with the presents which the British Government thought proper to send. His Majesty seems to have been highly offended at the absence of a carriage and pair of horses, for which he had evidently begged, and to have considered that he was scurvily treated—so much so, indeed, that he displayed that "stubborn resolve to ignore, even in the smallest matter, the wishes of her Majesty's Government." However, this has not preyed sufficiently upon the mind of her Majesty's Commissioner to prevent his filling his two volumes with very interesting accounts of what he saw and heard in Dahome. Readers will be astonished to find how insignificant, in comparison with the estimate of many travel-writers, he represents the kingdom of Dahome to be, and how paltry a body of troops he considers the so-called Amazons to be. Still, if he diminishes the glory of the above-named sturdy females, the history the tunel of romances, he also mitigates the horrors which rumour has appended to the tales of human sacrifice. These, he says, are human sacrifices he does not deny; but he shows that they are not so frequent, so unreasonable, and so indiscriminate as they have been the custom to believe. The personal appearances of the "Royal Savage" is thus described:—"He looks a King of (negro) men, without handsome features, great or weakness of face, but expressive, and the complexion the nEAnorrs deep of this black Biad. His person is athletic, consisting of six feet high, lithe, agile, thin flanks and broad shoulders, with muscular limbs, well-turned wrists and neat ankles, but a distinctly cucumber-shaped shin. . . . The skull is rounded and well set on; the organs of intellect stand prominently out, a slight baldness appears upon the poll, and the 'regions of cautiousness' are marked by two cocked-hat bumps. The ears are small and Dahome for the purpose of attaching coral, Popoleads, or brass and silver coveries. The hair, generally close shaven, is of the peppercorn variety; the eyebrows are scanty, the eyes full and the mustaches are thinner. He has not his father's receding forehead, nor the wicked look which distinguishes many of his sons. His strong jaw renders the face indeed 'jowly' rather than oval, consequently the expression is normally that of a man in a state of ill-humoured, whilst the smile which comes out of it is pleasant. His nails are allowed to attain mandarin length. . . . His sub-laminal lids are thick, strong, and sound both, the inner angle being somewhat thickened by tobacco. His eyes are red, bleared, and inflamed, . . . and he is more intoxicated, grosser, quarrelsome, and squalling. . . . He has suffered severely from the smallpox. . . . About the only vestige of satire in the usual Dahomian mark—three short parallel and perpendicular lancet scars, which scarce reach below that the eyebrows, a little above the place where the latter meet the eyeground. . . . It is the portrait of a man who has overcome at Abeokuta, with respect to whose recent defeat Captain Burton writes—"I cannot but think that Gelele has shown more nerve than the blow, and before that time I hope to see her level with the ground." The nineteenth chapter of the second volume is devoted to a consideration of "The Negro in Nature." In which we think we gather that Captain Burton is ready to "defend the employment of the negro in domestic working animals by higher and more civilised men." Does he mean compulsory employment? If not, he simply puts the negro upon the same footing upon which superior persons (in their own opinion) place unreduced animals and the lower world, which is all that even philanthropists desire. Only allow that the negro is a man of the lowest white man, and the negro's participation in a common humanity is established. Captain Burton regrets that he has been said, and often by his own personal experience about the natural inferiority of the negro; but many of the facts which he and his party affirm are, on equally good authority, if we do not greatly mistake. However, it is not here that the question can be discussed; let ethnologists and travellers state their theories and their experience, and the inquirer decide for themselves.

The Last of Cuergwyn. By Mary Howitt. (3 vols. Hurst and Blackett.) A genteel, inoffensive, unobjectionable story. Indeed, it is so substantial as to border sometimes upon the prolixious. The descriptions are carried out with a conscientiousness as regards detail which is surprisingly quite irritating. Not a piece at which the reader is carried along is by no means tremendous; one performs one's journey for the most part at a jog-trot, but there are a few bursts, glimpses of beautiful scenery, and apparitions of charming characters. The plot is of little account; but the purpose of the story is unexceptionable. It is to show how hard it is to profit a man upon the world, and that the names of the first Napoleon, of Murat, and equally prominent historical characters are unsuitable for Christian names. The appellations of private individuals, whose friends or families might shrink from, they have been generally changed." The change of name, we presume, applies only to the pretty women, or else the title is a misnomer, for it is difficult to conceive that any parents could profess to treat of "public men" and yet conceal their names on the ground that they were "private individuals." The two volumes consist of a number of short stories, or less connected chapters, amusing and interesting, drawn from the experience either of the author herself or of others who have imparted their treasures to her, and form a very entertaining collection.

The Fairy Circle: Goldsmith, Illustrated (Cassell, Petter, and Galpin); Delisle's Illustrated Goldsmith (Ward and Lock). Each of these two handsome volumes is an edition of the chief and choicest productions of the most charming English author of the last century whose graceful humour and geniality are sure to be relished by an increasing number of readers in every age. The paper, the print, the woodcuts and the binding, of both publications are of such a quality that we are astonished how them afford them for so small a price. It might be rather an invidious task for us to draw a comparison between these volumes with respect to the merit of their illustrations; each of them being adorned with about one hundred engravings, designed by artists of well-known talent, and displaying such a variety of scenes and subjects, with such originality of conception, that it is worth while to explore the pages of both. With regard, however, to their literary editorship, we are inclined to give a decided preference to the publication of Messrs. Cassell and Co., for reasons which shall be mentioned. The biographical account of Goldsmith, by Dr. J. F. Waller, of Dublin, in Messrs. Cassell's volume, is more complete than that by Dr. H. W. Dulcken, prefixed to Messrs. Ward and Lock's edition of the poet. The latter does not even mention, for example, such facts as Goldsmith's being for eighteen months a medical student at Edinburgh, and for a whole year afterwards at Leyden, neither of which places is named. The selection of Goldsmith's works is pretty much the same in both editions, except that the one published by Messrs. Ward and Lock contains "The Captivity, an Oratorio," the elegy called "Threnodia Augustalis" on the death of the Princess Dowager of Wales, and two or three epilogues, with other short pieces of verse, which the collection of Messrs. Cassell does not include. "The Vicar of Wakefield," "The Traveller," "The Deserted Village," "The Haunch of Venison," and "Retaliation," with those admirable comedies "She Stoops to Conquer" and "The Good-natured Man," will be found in each volume. The text is better, we think, in Messrs. Cassell's edition. As an example, we may quote the true reading, "Breasts the keen air," instead of "Breathes the keen air," in the first line of "The Deserted Village," as given by Messrs. Cassell had introduced the revision of their "Goldsmith" has most accurately performed his task. The minutest details of punctuation, which, in the hurry indeed becoming in the reading of verse, are more correctly attended to in this edition than in any other we have seen. The foot-notes and introductory matter, the critical comment, and the occasional foot-notes are placed where they are wanted to supply a reference or explanation. Thus the allusion, for example, to "Luke's iron crown" would be unintelligible to the ordinary nine readers out of a hundred without such aid. "The Haunch of Venison," with its personal allusions (the following, representing under the disguise of dashes or asterisks, four of the author's private friends:—

"——9, and C——y, and R——ch, and H——ch."

We might defy the unassisted reader to guess at the names who are meant. Thanks to the edition published by Messrs. Cassell, he may learn that they were Dr. Barnard, Mr. Edward, afterwards Duke of Norfolk, a patron of literary men of that day, George Colman, the dramatist and lessee of Covent Garden, who was nicknamed "Jolly Dog," and Richard Hennikar Hennikar, Esq., "Dick Hennikar;" and the disguised playwright Paul Hifferman, Goldsmith's fellow-collegian, "Paul Hifferman, surgeon and once a medical student—Hifferman, called for shortness "Hiff."

"There's Howard and Coley, and Hawkesworth and Hiff, Bickerstaff, Cumberland, Reynolds, and Cliff."

This result's a specimen of the advantages of good literary editorship. The pleasant personalities of "Retaliation" are explained in the edition of Messrs. Cassell and Company, while Messrs. Ward and Lock's volume is left unexplained.

The Poems of John Dryden. Edited, with a Memoir, by Robert Bell. (4 vols. Parker, Son, and Bourn.) We have to find fault with giving publicity to the fact that at least the first volume (for we have not seen the other) of this edition is "for the use of schools." Shakspeare's, Ben Jonson's, and Cowper's poems (vol. i.), carefully edited by Mr. Bell, are "for use."

The Laboratory Guide: for Students of Agricultural Chemistry. Arranged by Arthur Herbert Church, M.A. (1 vol. John Van Voorst.) Mr. Church is a Fellow of the University in the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester, and he therefore speaks, in a manner, ex-cathedrâ. We do not feel ourselves disqualified, because he has a certain claim to be listened to; and we recommend his book to the attention of "whom it may concern."

The Earth and Man. By Arnold Page. (1 vol. Edinburgh: W. P. Nimmo.) This is a "Handy Outline of Geology" intended to serve "as a preparation to satisfy those who wish for more than the common herd with respect to geological facts; secondly, to stimulate those who would gain climb to the heights of the science but have no guide to direct their steps; and thirdly, to those who have the leisure he deserves and ought to attain in both cases.

The Gymnasium. By Archibald Maclaren, M.D. (1 vol. Tweedie.) From an introduction by Mr. M. C. Tyler, a quondam pupil of Dr. Lewis, we learn that "the common-sense of the Turner Society" begins, the second and third parts being translations of the celebrated German treatises of Kloss and Schreber on the 'Dumb-bell' and the 'Pangymnastikon,' and that "the first part" of the present volume describes a new and very unique system of gymnastics constructed by Dr. Lewis, and which has met with distinguished success in the popularity in America of Dr. Lewis's system, so far as it can be represented on paper; and we have reason to believe that it has been practised with much success in this country to a considerable extent; it therefore deserves the close attention of all who have the welfare of humanity at heart, without prejudice or favour." Dr. Maclaren, on the other hand, in the general's received sense of muscular contortions, &c., are unnecessary, either for health, or for activity, or for bearing; but we are aware that with many the mere mention of "Dr. Lewis" is then, for the moment, to examined: the book is freely enlivened with explanatory illustrations representing the human form in various (apparently very unnatural and the human face in every stage (apparently) of agony. But the reader need not be alarmed, for it is well known that in fencing or in violin playing the easiest position is the one you use to) it is that which at the first trial approximates to torture.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will of Lieutenant-General Sir John Rowland, Bustace, K.H., was proved in London on the 19th ult. The executors and trustees therein appointed are Sir Hugh Hyde Bright Bart., Sir John Rose Bart., the Rev. Richard Seymour Guinness, Esq., of College-green, Dublin; and Robert Bradshaw, Esq., of Lincoln's-inn-fields, Middlesex. The will is dated the acting executors. The will bears date July 29, 1857, and Sir John died on the 1st ult. The testator, as Fellowship, left the care of Captain Eyre, gallant General was a brother of the late General Sir W. C. Eustace, and had served in Egypt, and was present at the battle of Alexandria, obtaining the Bachelor and Knight of Hanover. Sir John possessed considerable estates in Ireland, and by the will of his late brother, Sir Augustus Eyre Eustace. Amongst the legacies in his will is the name of Lady Maria Forester (wife of the Hon. Cecil Weld Forester), to whom he bequeaths £1,000. The trust by whom the testator has left a life interest in the town and inside of Ballinay, consisting of about 600 acres, which, upon her decease, will revert to his nephew, the Rev. Robert Eustace, son of the late Lieutenant-General W. C. Eustace, and his wife, Lady Emily Eustace, and to the heirs male of their body. Failing issue, there are many legacies and annuities. The residue of his property is left to his nephew, Robert Eustace, the Rev. Augustus Eyre Eustace, and Henry Cassidy.

The will of Vice-Admiral John Drake, R.N., of Castle Thorpe, near Stoney Stratford, Buckinghamshire, was proved in the London Court, on the 6th ult., by the oaths of Admiral Sir Thomas Forsyth Forrest, K.C.B., on the 6th of August last, in the city of Bath, having executed his will Augustus Drake, Esq., Captain Drake, Commander Drake, and Miss Drake, the Hon. Hilda Adelaide Drake; Henry Style Norris, Esq., of the Colonial Office; and Mrs. Sarah Drake, of Castle Thorpe, widow of the testator's brother, and the limited property between his wife and son, John Horatio Drake, leaving his wife a life interest in the income of his estate, which, upon her decease, will devolve to the son.

The will of Thomas Forsyth Forrest, Esq., formerly of Bolton House, near South Shields, Durham, but late of Marsden Cottage, in the county of Durham, was proved in London under £60,000 personalty by the sole and trustees are Mrs. Sarah Forrest, the relict; Andrew Stoddart, Esq., of South Shields, and Thomas Forsyth Forrest, Esq., of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, South Shields. To each of the executors he leaves a legacy of £100. To his relict he bequeaths the residue of debts a year, in addition to the sum under marriage settlement; also his residence, with many other advantages arising from the estate. To each of his two daughters, Isabella, £12,000. To his son, Thomas Forsyth Forrest, Esq., he devises his real estate, and leaves to him the residue of the personalty.

During a recent representation at the Ulm theatre, twenty-four lamps supplied with petroleum oil, attached to the chandelier suspended from the roof, burst in succession, and the burning oil fell like a shower of fire on the spectators, among whom were a number of ladies. In a moment the dresses of twenty of them were in flames, and serious burns were the consequence. One lady was so much injured that she died in a few hours.

MUSIC.

On this head, in so far as London is concerned, we can only speak in the future tense—not of what is, or has been done, but of what is going to be done.

Mellon's Promenade Concerts begin every, over, Covent Garden Theatre has been closed; to be opened, however, this evening, by the Royal English Opera Company, who are to begin their proceedings with Auber's "Masaniello." We have already mentioned the names of the principal performers. The first tenor, Mr. Charles (or Carl) Adams, has just arrived in town, after a long residence in England, having been born at Leeds; but he left this country at four years of age, and his subsequent life has been passed first in America and afterwards in Germany, where he has attained the rank of principal tenor at the Royal Opera in Berlin. He is described as possessing the highest attainments as an actor and singer. Among other things, he is said to possess the ut de poitrine (or high C from the chest), which is so much talked of nowadays. We shall see in such cases whether he has it or not, provided that his voice and execution are sufficient for all reasonable purposes, and that he is not one of those little bits of complete knowledge of his art with the genius and feeling of an artist.

M. Jullien's Concerts at Her Majesty's Theatre terminate this evening. Mr. Mapleson is then to give a very short series of Italian operas, with Titiens, Giuglini, Gardoni, Bettini, and other favourites of last year's company. The theatre will then be opened for English opera by Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison, by whom Mr. Sims Reeves has been engaged at principal tenor. The Sacred Harmonic Society, moreover, and Mr. Martin's National Choral Society, will begin their oratorio performances at Exeter Hall early next month. Thus one London amateurs of music will soon have ample supplies of their favourite entertainments.

The Paris Italian Opera opened, as usual, on the 1st of this month, with Verdi's "Trovatore." Mdme. Lagrange was the heroine; Signor Graziani, tenor; Tenor, Formes, the Duke; and Signor Delle-sedie the Jester. On the Wednesday following Patti appeared, and was received with the utmost enthusiasm.

At the Grand Opéra, a new work, entitled "Roland à Roncevaux," from the pen of M. Mermet, a young composer of merit, was produced on Monday last and favourably received.

THE THEATRES.

It is with great satisfaction that we can record a worthy attempt to revive poetic drama. Mr. Buchanan, to whom the Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts awarded its silver medal for his volume of poems entitled "Undertones," produces a drama, in three acts, called "The Witchfinder," and obtained its performance at Sadler's Wells. It was produced on Saturday before a numerous audience, including much literary celebrity. The subject is somewhat original; though, some years ago, Mr. Henry Spicer produced, at the Marylebone Theatre, under Mr. Nowak's management, a play—in which the infamous Matthew Hopkins was a chief character—on a like interest, which play was called "The Witch-Wife." But Mr. Spicer treated the subject with a lighter hand than Mr. Buchanan, and with a better knowledge of stage construction. In fact, "The Witch-Wife" is by far the best of Mr. Spicer's contributions to the boards, and bears evidence on its face of the experienced playwright. Mr. Elijah's mother, who acted the action of his plot in Salem, in New England, where, as we find from Cotton Mather's narrative, an extraordinary delusion prevailed and spread at the beginning of the seventeenth century, the people believing in witchcraft to such an extent that ultimately there was a statute-law passed for punishing the cruel and sanguinary laws with which the supposed crime was punished. Mr. Buchanan, thinking that wizard power might be counteracted by witch power, has his Witch-finder as a hero, suffering under the illusion that he has a peculiar faculty for detecting witches, and who, after dooming others to the misery of a false accusation, suffers himself from remorse, because his mother is threatened in the like manner by the fanaticism of their neighbours. The character of the witch-finder is by the view of a noble bridge athwart a stream that runs into the bay of Massachusetts. Here we become acquainted with an idiot youth, Elijah Brogden (Miss Marriott), who loves to interpret the birds' singing that he is to be the slayer of a fair young witch, Ruth Holt (Miss E. Bradley). Now Ruth Holt has not yet been accused of witchcraft; but Elijah's mother, Mrs. Brogden, is already suspected, and is in due course brought before Master Holt (Mr. Radcliffe), who seeks her to help interrogate the gaze and discover her as guilty. The idiot Elijah utters a vehement curse on the witchfinder in return, and the act-drop falls on an effective tableau. The threatened retribution commences in the next act. Martin Holt has an enemy in one Josiah Jones (Mr. W. H. Drayton), who, to enforce the love of Ruth, drives matters to extremity; but, when the maiden resists all attempts to divorce her from her lover, Walter Vane (Mr. Charles Newman), he leaves her to her fate. Ruth had almost succeeded in persuading the idiot youth to leave witchfinding, and voyage with her and Vane to England; but when the people of Salem charge Ruth with witchcraft, the youth, to whom the witch might be known, his vanity is again excited to show his miraculous power, and he flies into the room in the form of a bird, and his daughter is thus condemned on his own evidence, his agony becomes intolerable, and he goes mad. The last act is occupied with the efforts of Vane and his friend to deliver the fair girl from her danger. Ultimately she owes her deliverance to the idiot, who has by this time fled to the madhouse, and all three are grouped at the bridge together, where they are pursued by the infuriate townspeople. Opportunely, Vane enters with a friendly vessel in the bay that the monument of Ruth has repealed the laws against witchcraft, and that legal vengeance will be taken on the mob if the poor girl shall be molested. Josiah Jones commits suicide Martin Holt, and is killed in turn by Vane. The curtain accordingly falls on a tumultuous struggle. In the acting of this play, as well as its poetic merits, much commendation is owing; and when the play shall have been somewhat compressed, we have no doubt of its proving a fortunate experiment for both the author and the management have shown a laudable ambition.

At Drury Lane, on Saturday, the tragedy of "Othello" was represented when Mrs. Hermann Vezin made her first appearance at this theatre as Desdemona. Mr. Creswick supported the part of Iago and Mr. Walter Lacy that of Othello. Miss Atkinson was Emilia. Mr. Phelps, of course, retained his own rôle of the noble Moor, and performed it, as he always does which first secured him the approbation of the public in this character.

A new drama has been produced at the Grecian. It is entitled "The Phantom Captain," and the action is laid in the Peninsula during the war. The interest turns on the danger relating to a captain of Portuguese cavalry, commander of a brigand; but the former, Cæsar de Cabanil (Mr. David H. Jones), has an active friend in Lillas de Santa Cruz (Miss Lizzie Mandelbert), who saves him from drinking drugged wine, and rescues him from the tavern, which is possessed by the brigands. Cæsar has a brother, Manuel (Mr. Gilford), who is about to be married to Georgina (Miss Marie Brower), but is suffering from slow poison at the instance of Manuel. Something dreadful has occurred in the past, but Cæsar determines to substitute his brother, and Lillas the bride, when he is arrested for a duel, in which he has killed a Spanish officer. He is condemned to be shot, and falls, but only simulates death. He seeks his regiment, and contrives that he shall be permitted to act as the phantom captain, and mounts a horse as such. Still supposed to be dead, he visits the Spanish camp in the disguise of a corner, where he frees Hector, who is a prisoner under condemnation of death, from the power of Manuel, who is in command. Various changes of fortune then take place, and Lillas falls into the power of Manuel, who puts to rex with her in a boat. But a storm arises, and she is ultimately delivered by her lover and Manoel is drowned. The play is capitally acted and will prove attractive.

A Munich letter states that Richard Wagner, the well-known composer, is at present seriously ill.

"JOHN BUNYAN RECITING 'THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS' TO HIS FRIENDS IN BEDFORD GAOL."

THE character and circumstances of John Bunyan alike marked him out for persecution in a controversial and intolerant age. Even in 1637, in the best days of Oliver Cromwell, he was indicted at the Assizes for preaching at Eaton. The Presbyterian ministers who were then in possession of the Churchmen's livings could not endure that an "illiterate tinker and an unordained Baptist minister" should be suffered to preach. The ignorant and malicious were stirred up to circulate rumours that he was a "witch, a Jesuit, and a highwayman!" After the Restoration it is, of course, not surprising that he should have been one of the first persons punished for nonconformity. A warrant was issued against Bunyan as if he had been a dangerous person, the head and front of his offending being that he went about preaching, because he was known to be hostile to the restored Church, and especially to the prescribed Liturgy of that Church; and probably it might be remembered that he had served in the Parliamentary army. Accordingly, he was arrested at a meeting in a private house, and committed to Bedford Gaol by the Justice before whom he was brought. At the ensuing sessions he was indicted as a person who "devilishly and pernicously abstained from coming to church to hear Divine service, and who was a common upholder of several unlawful meetings and conventicles, to the great disturbance and distraction of the good subjects of this kingdom." The sentence which followed upon Bunyan resolutely refusing to retract or give any promise not to preach is equally characteristic of the time:—Then said the magistrate, "Hear my judgment! You must be had back again to prison, and there lie for three months following; and at three months' end, if you do not submit to go to church to hear Divine service, and leave your preaching, you must be banished the realm. And if, after such a day as shall be appointed you to be gone, you shall be found in this realm, or be found to come over again without special license from the King, you must stretch by the neck for it. I tell you plainly."

These threats were certainly not executed to the full; but, simply for conscience sake, and in the cause of religious liberty, John Bunyan endured an imprisonment of twelve years in Bedford Gaol, and even risked his life. During part of this long period the strictness of his confinement was, however, much relaxed. Like Joseph in Egypt, he found a friend in "the keeper of the prison," the gaoler allowing him to be almost like a prisoner at large, and his family and friends to visit him. He attended the meetings of the congregation to which he belonged, and on one occasion went to see "the Christians in London." This, however, brought on the gaoler a severe reproof, and thenceforward for seven years Bunyan was closely confined. Out of evil came good, however. To this imprisonment we doubtless owe "The Pilgrim's Progress"—a book probably more widely read than any other, save the Bible; for not only is it read wherever the English language is spoken, but it has been translated, to suit Roman Catholic as well as Protestant readers, into every language of Europe. Had Bunyan always enjoyed liberty, it is probable, from all we know of his character, that he would have been too actively employed to compose "The Pilgrim's Progress," or, at all events, to work out so perfectly all the details of that wonderful allegory.

Of the picture engraved little further need be said by way of illustration—the artist tells his story so well. Bunyan is reciting with characteristic fervour some scene of the "Progress"—let us suppose it to be the story of Christian and Faithful imprisoned by the people of Vanity Fair—which some he has just composed on the desk to his right, under which lies a huge book—either the Bible or the "Book of Martyrs," his constant companions. His listeners are two Bedford friends and the good gaoler, standing with his keys at his side; while, nestling under Bunyan's arm, is the poor little blind daughter who was long a daily companion of his captivity. The picture has great artistic merit, particularly as regards drawing and character, and is the work of a young artist studying at Munich. It has been purchased as one of the first pictures collected for the public gallery at Melbourne, Australia.

"THE WAEFU' HEART."

IN the opinion of Sir Walter Scott and many other competent judges, there is not in the language a more perfect, tender, and pathetic ballad or tale of humble life than that of "Auld Robin Gray," which has supplied the subject of the picture engraved on the next page. The ballad itself is, of course, familiar to all; but there are remarkable circumstances connected with its composition, which may, perhaps, be less universally known or less well remembered. "Auld Robin Gray" was composed, about 1771, by Lady Anne Barnard, when about twenty-one years of age. Lady Anne was the daughter of James Lindsay, the fifth Earl of Balcarres. It was composed to an ancient air, and instantly on its publication became popular. The lady kept, however, the secret of its authorship for more than fifty years. After the lapse of that long period she acknowledged it (in 1823) in a letter to Sir Walter Scott, accompanying the disclosure with a full account of the circumstances under which it was written. With this acknowledgment Lady Anne sent two continuations to the ballad; but these, like nearly all attempts of the kind, are greatly inferior to their prototype. The tale is indeed so complete as it exists in the original that it is difficult to imagine how any additions could be made without marring its simplicity or diminishing its pathos.

The "simplicity" of the story strikes one as its leading characteristic. And yet how pregnant with suggestiveness are the few details! And is there not consummate art concealed under every little affecting touch? At first we are told that Jamie could not marry his Jeanie for the simple reason that he had but a crown; therefore he goes to sea in order that he may convert his crown into a pound. Soon after he had done so, misfortunes pour on Jeanie's family like rain: the mother falls sick, the cow is stolen away, the father breaks his arm, and Jeanie tries to win bread for all, but in vain. Then the comparatively rich Auld Robin Gray comes courting, and the while generously maintains Jeanie's parents. As the climax of her troubles, poor Jeanie hears that the ship with her Jamie is wrecked; but the poor girl infers, contrary to what the ballad lets it be understood, that her lover is not lost. At length, then, her father's entreaties and her mother's heart-breaking looks prevail, and she takes Auld Robin for her gudeman. The last three stanzas we cannot refrain from giving, especially as parts of them are quoted by the painter as more particularly illustrated by this picture. The circumstances of the return afford a very distant parallel to those described in "Enoch Arden," Tennyson's new poem:—

I hadna been a wife a week but only four
When sitting sae mournfully at the door,
I saw my Jamie's wraith, for I could not think it he,
Till he said, "I'm come back for to marry thee."

Oh, sair did we greet, and muckle did we say;
We took but ae kiss, and we tore ourselves away.
I wish I were dead! but I'm no like to die,
And why do I live to say, "Wae's me?"

I gang like a ghaist, and I canna to spin,
I daurna think on Jamie, for that wad be a sin;
But I'll do my best a gude wife to be,
For Auld Robin Gray is kind unto me.

The touching picture of the Waefu' Wife sitting in the "ingle nook" before the fire in deep despondency, with a shepherd's collie dog as the only companion of her brooding solitude—which we have engraved from the Sheepshanks' Collection of the South Kensington Museum—requires no other comment than the ballad it so well illustrates. The painter of the picture, Thomas Duncan, A.R.A., is much esteemed in Scotland, though little known in England, and died at a comparatively early age. He was born in 1807 and died in 1845. He studied under Sir William Allen; in 1840 he exhibited in London his best-known picture of "Prince Charles Entering Edinburgh," and in 1843 was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy. The picture engraved was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1841.

"LOCH ERICHT—A BRIGHT NIGHT."

LOCH ERICHT, or Erochd, though either not mentioned at all, or scarcely alluded to, in the ordinary tourists' handbooks for Scotland, is shown to possess sufficient attractions for the painter in the picture engraved, and it is a lake of considerable extent, measuring sixteen miles in length, by about one mile in width; the northern and longer portion lying in Perthshire, and the southern and shorter portion in the county of Inverness. Its waters are emptied into Loch Rannoch, which lies about five miles to the south, whence they flow through Loch Tummel into the River Tay. One reason why the lake is not a favourite with tourists and the compilers of guides for their use is its comparative inaccessibility. There is no road to Loch Ericht. It may most easily be visited at its southern extremity either from the head of Loch Rannoch, to which there is a road along that lake; or from the inn at Dalnacardoch, on the great north road. In either case, however (but much more if the visitor attempt to cross the mountains from Dalnacardoch), a weary extent of bog, muir, moss and mountain has to be traversed. There is an ancient tradition relating to this lake, according to which the district now covered by its waters was formerly dry, and constituted an entire parish, called Teadail, which, with its inhabitants, was overwhelmed in one night by the sudden bursting of an immense body of subterranean water.

The difficulty or tediousness of approach has, we see, not deterred the painter from exploring Loch Ericht. And we cannot doubt, when before his picture, that he has done so at a time when its sheltered water, still and silent; its dreary banks, haunted only by the bittern and the red deer; and its barren mountains, even in daylight rarely trodden by the foot of man, all seem most desolate and solitary;

MEMBERS OUT OF PARLIAMENT.

PERHAPS for lack of larger objects, some of the journals have been falling foul of a metropolitan member. As a rule, the subject is tempting; and one is not prepared to say that there was not special temptation in the particular case. As the matter has been taken up, the question rather resolves itself into a definition of the word representation. The critics of Mr. Doulton's recent speech to his constituents in Lambeth seem rather to take him to task for speaking in an ex cathedrâ tone, and demeaning himself before them as if he were Sir Oracle in the house, patron of Ministers, and the terror of Opposition. Just in passing, it may be observed that, in the course of last Session, Mr. Doulton contrived to give the Government one of those defeats which cause upon them every year a sort of fit of convulsions; and if it is not surprising that he should not have forgotten it, and that it should have influenced his spirit and given a regular insinuation and a confidence to his talk and his demeanour. It ought, however, to be counted in his favour that he did not mention the fact, and crow in proportion to the elevation of his feelings. But we hear something insinuated about unfitness to represent a great constituency, and the list of London, with its population, a metaphysical sense, there may be something in this opinion. The theory may be both ingenious and conscientiously held by great statesmen, or, at least, by eminent public men of name and reputation. Indeed, that has in times gone by been the case with Lambeth, when the Whigs, being in their ascendancy, were practically executing the lesson that the object of the Reform Bill was to create popular constituencies represented by aristocratic members. At the same right honourable gentlemen of ancient lineage and large landed estates were chosen, time and again, for this unusually Radical borough. If, however, representing is taken in the sense of typifying, we are bold to assert that Mr. Doulton is the man for Lambeth: an ensample of middle-class energy, and a Parliamentary example for an assuredly middle-class elective body. As to the "loud talk" which has been resented at, Mr. Doulton's manner betokens no ignorance. Why, at the "Horns" at Kennington, even the right honourable representatives of former days were obliged to creep out of the room, and finally and by universal consent were obliged to put the re-echoing of which the Lambeth great hall of audience was accustomed to resound. In fact, Mr. Doulton's constituents knew that Mr. Disraeli is something for which the seekers after mild sensation are bound to be grateful at this time of day, and that Mr. Disraeli appears, of late, to be a slight tendency in Mr. Disraeli to play the grand negligent—to enact the country magnate in high style; and Mr. Doulton's constituents must have gathered from the tone of his censures, because one of them was an admission that Mr. Disraeli's voice was not to be of course all in the concerted music. That he was a leader of the country party with a vengeance; and the triumph was one calculated to make a gentleman of Mr. Disraeli's temperament quite spring out. In the Session of 1845-7, and there are no records of the mordant, spirit of the Disraelian eloquence of 1846-7; and here and there one caught a phrase which gave the key-note to the position of the country and borough, he offered himself up a sacrifice to Conservatism, because he had vowed at the great party dinner to Sir Robert Peel that no disqualifying feeling in the perusal of this latest effusion of Mr. Disraeli, it was that there was some peril to personal popularity in entering on the violently conspicuous position of a political opponent. The chief of a party may perhaps be able to despise the opinions of individuals, but the opinions of large constituencies he is compelled to widen as they go. However, Mr. Trumper has publicly announced that he is not offended, and seems to please himself on having been the means of bringing out some of Mr. Doulton's opinions on the political prefer and master—which, on the whole, is not surprising on the part of Mr. Trumper.

Really the palaver season is so prolific that one gets fastidious, and inclined to make delicate extracts only out of the mass of member talk which is poured out. Certainly Mr. Doulton never became himself so well as on the late occasion of his farewell to the electors of South Hampshire, at Portsmouth. Perhaps, as the member for the borough county

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Everyone has heard of the "Davenport Brothers" since the Times brought them forward and the Saturday Review wrote one of its stinging articles upon them. They are two thin young men from Yankeeland, who, being spiritualists with spiritualists, and merely scientific inquirers, about a "power" which they have, with savans, have succeeded in creating a sensation. At present their séances are quasi-private, but to-morrow perhaps will see them exhibiting in public at so much per head. After obtaining themselves bound by ten and thick ropes, neck, body, arms, and feet, to chairs, their hands fastened behind their backs, they are shut up in a cabinet, and "spiritual" hands untie them and let them forth; spiritual mouths blow trumpets and beat drums; spiritual hands twitch out and ring bells; spiritual fingers, spiritually assisted, play a concert, is heard from the place of durance in which these bound and bounding brothers remain. Of course they, spiritually, do not do this, and of course the entrepreneurs of the show, Dr. Ferguson and Mr. Jones, who are supposed to be the cumplices of Professor Anderson, the Wizard of the North, assert their honesty, as we heard, with oaths. So we are called to believe that the Creator—it amounts to this—allows his angels, from the New Testament new to spirits, to tie and untie these two thin young men and to beat certain devil's tattoos at the price of ten guineas per hour. One hour after this supernatural manifestation they "go it again" for another ten guineas! The Wizard of the North, in a temperate letter, has characterised these thin individuals as "clever artistes"—i.e., contortionists, who can twist their limbs into knots or out of them—and no doubt he is right. But the mission, the mission literary persons féte them at their houses and give a sanction to their tricks; and so those who are simple and credulous are confirmed and confused with an appeal to faith and garbled citations of Scripture until, indeed, as in Pope's "Dunciad,"

> Religion, blushing, veils her sacred fires,
> And, unawares, morality expires.

Indeed, we might quote the last line. "And universal darkness buries all." for the spirits certainly have been encouraged in New York, as the spirits are evidently working nobly for him, and perhaps produce his about thirty shillings a week. Then these spiritualists are somehow connected with an "organ of" something or another, "of atheism" we think, but the most curious matter is that a gentleman whose name is not quite unknown in literature gives an account of a spiritualistic flower by means of writing mediumship, from the 3rd of March, 1858, to the present time, I have, exclusive of sequels, some of which have been printed, received no less than 6767 communications by this evening, Sept. 14, 1864 inclusive—therefore, mirror responses, 3513 ; writing ditto, 4707 ; total, 6767, exclusive of duplicates, which I have not added up, as I close writing." "The bricks," as Jack Cade says, "are alive this day to testify it." But large numbers are nothing unless they are good writings! Will not the owner present them to the library of Colney Hatch or of Hanwell Lunatic Asylum ?

And now one word more. Is it or is there not extant an Act of Parliament which will touch these charlatans who pretend to deal with the devil, and is it not worth while to put down the present increase of lunacy amongst us? Remembering Joanna Southcott, Thom of Canterbury, and other idiots, who brought ridicule on their mercy, but could not shield or protect the many estimable twaddlers who, having some little intellect and no judgment whatever, are tying their much borrowed brains in knots of twenty thousand fathoms long to undo than any the Brothers Davenport can slip through.

That excellent spirit, the "Immortal William," has made his appearance again, and this time in a way which reflects honour on his native town and townsmen. Everybody knows the history of the "Terceneira" relics. We, in London, nobly refused to permit our money besides. They, in Stratford, did a very great deal; but somebody hindered, and he did not "pay." But Stratford took it all the expense on its shoulders, and the Mayor and committee deserve our warm sympathy and admiration. The chairman, Mr. Charlecombe, Vicar, and all have put their shoulders to the wheel and paralelled out the expense. The Mayor, Mr. Flower, and his two sons pay down a cheque for £1000 ; the Earl of Ellesmere, £500 ; and so on down to a great irregation, and dear to his parishioners as an exemplary clergyman—pays £250 ; and other gentlemen, many with little to spare, do it, pay in proportion. Some one else ought to help these public-spirited men. By-the-way, we do not see any of the names of the London members of the committee. Surely, they will not be backward in coming forward.

From the Langham Hotel Company to the Charing-cross ; from companies for music to companies of paviours for discord ; from babyhoon to burials, matrimonial to funeral companies, and, by-the-bye, and rebuilding companies ; refreshment and library companies ; banking, mining, and stock-buying companies ; tobacco and cigar, cider and perry, wine, beer, and spirit companies ; and, lastly, here are two companies which spring up, we presume that soon we shall not have an industrial unrepresented among us, one for the burial of a corpse for somebody else. And what do you think of a "Comic Company" ? a joint-stock of jokers and band of burlesquers, and a confectionary of sanctimonies ? Such, we are grieved to say, is the case. Perhaps the announcement is part of the rare, rib-tickling, mirth-provoking, inexhaustible, side-splitting humour of the Yankees which cannot possibly indulge in, and which we, poor dull dogs, can't see. The new-paper or periodical started by this company is to be illustrated with coloured cuts—a plan unsuccessfully tried in Paris.

It is a pity that we have no one at present who studies actors and actresses with that acuteness which marked the early years of Mr. Dickens. Does not everybody recollect the microscopic revelations he afforded us of Mr. Mortimer Crummles, Mr. Lillyvick, and Miss Snevellicci ? But did Boz, in any of his papers, remark upon the fact that whenever a tragic lady, who has "starred" it in country towns, is the torment of black hair (or her own wig) adopts a light chevelure, all the critics are astonished, and declare that she, by a stroke of inspiration, has magnetised them ? "Ah ! my friend," said a literary Cheeryman, "with what very little genius may one make a sensation !" This reflection is by-the-way. A real sensation was produced by the alteration of Miss Marriott into a fair idol boy (the playbills call him an "imbecile youth") in Mr. Buchanan's new drama, "Lucy Wilde's Reader," a play with the period in it, and with good acting too. Sadler's Wells is again declared to be the home of the poetic drama, and gentlemen with mild countenances, long hair, and poetic inspiration flock to it. Perhaps there is something too much of this. Poetry can exist out of decrepitude, and the one touch of nature need not always be given in blank verse ; but we are bound to say that Mr. Robert Buchanan has real stuff in him, and to acknowledge that he has been accepted amongst the crowned ones.

The Rev. Lord Sydney Godolphin Osborne, a clergyman who has written as boldly and with as much good, honest sense as in his days did the good and witty Sydney Smith, has lately put forward a manifesto upon agricultural education. We doubt whether we should not be justified in calling S. G. O.'s letter a pastoral in more senses than one, it is replete with good sense and happy similes, and contains one noteworthy sentence, which we wish to extract. It is this. S. G. O. wishes the young to be taught to read from some other book than that which most of us hold sacred :—"I cannot trust myself to say what I think of making the Bible an everyday hard lesson-book." No, indeed ! Can any deep-feeling and sensible man approve it ? S. G. O gives us a prospectus of an advanced school for the agricultural mind, in which everything is meant to be taught "except the Catechism." Surely, of all compact and beautiful moral essays ever written, the two on duty towards our neighbour in the Catechism are the most perfect. Why not teach them ? How many of us, high as well as low, are the better for having had them shut up in a cabinet, and "spiritual" hands untie them and let them forth ! spiritual mouths blow trumpets and beat drums ; spiritual hands twitch out and ring bells ; spiritual fingers, spiritually assisted, play a concert, is heard from the place of durance in which these bound and bounding brothers remain. SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

Zeiodelite is a mixture prepared by melting together twenty to thirty parts of resin, one part of sulphur, and four parts of powdered glass or pumice, which forms a mass as hard as stone, that resists the action of water, alkalies, and acids. Professor R. Brandes, of Breslau, recommends it, therefore, for making water-tight and air-tight cells for galvanic batteries.

Celestial Photography.—Mr. Warren De La Rue, of New York, has contributed to the Philosophical Magazine a paper on the photographic lunar drawings executed by Professor Bond, of Harvard College, with astronomical purposes, since their introduction by Foucault and Steinheil, have been carried to a high degree of perfection, and that by means of an object-glass of 15½ in. aperture he has been furnished with photographs of the moon 12 in. in diameter, which are of the most beautiful character, for which task photographic details, we must refer to the Professor's paper.

The Talking Fish a Seal.—We learn from a paper on seals, read by Mr. Flower, before the Zoological Society, and inserted in the Annals of Natural History, that the British Museum has lately purchased the skin of the talking fish exhibited in London some years ago by Mr. Bartlett. The proprietor, as Italian, at first said it was from the coast of South America, but afterwards declared it was from the Lake of Como, in the north side of the Mediterranean ; and on examination it proved to be the Common Seal (Phoca vitulina), the type of the genus established by the great Pelagus of F. Cuvier—a genus which was one of the desiderata in the Museum Catalogue of Mammalia, and which is now armed with the skin of the first seal from Madeira, which Dr. Gray described in the Annals of Natural History in 1850, and with the name of Hedgesonensis, and which, as far as we know, this animal is the same as the Mediterranean seal.

The Cause of the Present Conformation of the Alps. In this month's Philosophical Magazine the Professor considers the respective merits of the two theories which severally account for the mountain-system problem in physical geology. The former—the "fracture theory"—supposes that the Alps, and indeed all mountain-ranges, were caused by contraction of the earth's crust, and that the valleys of the Alps are the cracks of those sutures." The latter theory, which Professor Phillips would prefer to call that it has been cut out by the action of ice and water, the mountains themselves being left standing as the result of denudation. Professor R. Brandes, therefore, indicated must be added that due to the atmosphere (the severance and detachment of the mass of the Alps from the plains of Lombardy, of alluvium and elevated peaks. To the examination of these hypothesis, the Professor applies the results of observations made during his many and laborious explorations of the Alpine regions. For the numerous facts now adduced we must refer our readers to the paper itself, contenting ourselves with the bare the general conclusions on the question of Alpine Conformation :—" We have, then, in the Alps, a series of mountain-masses, and a series of valleys, by which we might conveniently give the name of 'valleys of the first order.' These valleys are separated from each other by ridges of the same order, which run into the main one, and which may be called 'valleys of the second order.' Many of these valleys are connected with the valleys of the second by them, which may be called 'valleys of the third order.' Smaller ravines and depressions, which may be called 'valleys of the fourth order,' and so on in order, and so on, until we reach streaks and cuttings so minute as not to deserve the name of valleys. But the above three orders are those in which a stream diminishing in magnitude as the order of the valley ascends, carving out valleys of the next lower order, is developed in the mountains. We have, moreover, that the larger valleys have been filled for untold ages by glaciers and snow-fields, the former of which, in their process over the rocky ground, ing down and tearing away the rocks over which they passed. We have, moreover, that the glaciers have been subjected to the action of a powerful and in enormous quantities, the very matter derived from the sculpture of the mountains themselves, and which has been in part carried away and deposited by the debris of the Alps. The lower, wider, and more level valleys are also filled with alluvium, the result of the denudation of the Alps by the agencies here mentioned. The erosion theory ascribes the formation of Alpine valleys to the agencies here mentioned. The author does not deny the action of water. The sufficiency by which its work is performed are still there, though it may be in a diminished degree. But he has shown, by the preceding facts, that it is demonstrable that they are competent to produce all the phenomena of the Alps. The author has also shown that the denudation of the Alps, and that they followed, as the Alpine valleys do, the direction of the strata of which they are composed. The valleys appear to me to be justified either by reason or by observation.

Latent Explosion of Steam-boilers.—In the Philosophical Magazine is a note, by M. Dufour, on this important subject in which he says that explosions are due to the sudden change of water into steam. Gases tend eminently to promote the vaporisation of liquids with which they come in contact, and the vaporisation of liquids, especially of solids, acting at first like gases themselves, is gradually removed by prolonged contact. Experiments have shown that a liquid may be raised to a heat far longer by their contact excite changes of condition, but become indifferent in the liquid. In the case of water, when it is raised to a heat of 212 deg. Fahr. under the ordinary pressure of the atmosphere, it immediately produced if the temperature be sudden and any portion of the water be converted into steam, which instantaneously realises those conditions.—"Two platinum wires, communicating with the outside, pass through the cover of a boiler, insulated from it. To these wires are connected with the two poles of a galvanic element, and a slight disengagement of gas is produced. When the boiler is filled with water, the gas of the current passes it is impossible to obtain the least retardation in boiling. If the water be drawn off to a certain level, the wires will be uncovered to some depth and by diminishing the superficial pressure, retardations are produced relative to those conditions in which explosions occur. Each of these retardation is immediately produced. If the retardation be considerable (from 10 to 15 degrees), the explosion will be produced on the slightest provocation of vapour, shellum of a liquid is immediately produced if the temperature be sudden and any portion of the water be converted into steam, which instantaneously realises those conditions.—"Two platinum wires, communicating with the outside, pass through the cover of a boiler, insulated from it. To these wires are connected with the two poles of a galvanic element, and a slight disengagement of gas is produced. Each of these retardation is immediately produced. If the retardation be considerable (from 10 to 15 degrees), the explosion will be produced on the slightest provocation of vapour as to resemble a true explosion. The vapour ascends to the very top of the boiler, and the water is projected in a violent manner, sometimes almost strong enough to break it. This experiment, which succeeds always when the boiling point has been reached by a diminution of the superficial pressure of vapour existing in the boiler? As water, in virtue of its great specific heat, cools very slowly, it retains for a longer time a temperature which ought to produce ebullition under this diminished pressure. This ebullition, doubtless, takes place most frequently in proportion as the diminution of pressure permits; but it may happen that, under exceptional circumstances, a retardation similar to that above described is produced, and that after a longer or shorter delay ebullition sets in, either spontaneously or in consequence of some foreign disturbance. This ebullition ought to manifest the characters many times observed in my apparatus, where the concussions raised the heavy support to which the retort was fixed. From the large quantity of water contained in a boiler, these strokes might well cause a fracture of the sides and the disastrous effects of this kind of accidents."

Mineral Waters and their Properties have been recently investigated by M. Scoutetten, who has forwarded an account of his views to the Academy of Sciences at Paris. The author is found in his 13 of the, of the Comptes Rendus, to refer to chemical researches on the subject, which are insufficient to explain the curative properties of these action on the animal system. After giving details respecting the character and action of sulphur and other waters, he gives the results of his own observations :—"1. Mineral waters determine all the phenomena of nutrition, due to electricity developed by contact with the body ; 2. They determine a modification which varies according to the nature of the mineralising elements ; and 3. They occasion a topical action, provoking divers eruptions on the skin." M. Scoutetten is very sanguine when he says : "For that the mystery of mineral waters is revealed, medical applications of them may be made with the same confidence as remedies indicated by science."

The Barnacle.—In the Annals of Natural History is a letter to the editor from Dr. R. Dyce, of Aberdeen, which accompanied a photograph of a rather remarkable specimen of the common barnacle (Lepas anatifera of Linnæus), which had been picked up by the fishermen in the Bay of Aberdeen a few days before. The stem of the animal, as far as I recol is about 27 lin. long and 16 in. in diameter, three sides of which are covered with the usual valves in a state of perfection. The stem, as they is about it make a diameter of 2½ lin., and floating on the water the great cot to a width of 4 ft. 6 in. The shell, as represented, is fully 3½ in. long, while the peduncle is no many 18 in." Dr. Dyce is not aware of this having been observed before in that country, and he believes it to occasionally found on the western coast. He considers that it is probable that the legs of the crab may be the attachment of the shell, floated from a southern latitude.

The Doctrine of Spontaneous Generation, so far back as the time of Redi (1686), was that decaying substances became converted during their decomposition into animal or vegetable forms capable of living them in the animal scale. This was opposed by Spallanzini by experiments and philosophical reasoning, to the effect that if the air be excluded no animalcules make their appearance, and consequently belief in spontaneous generation gave way. At a more recent period it has been revived. In the new number of the Quarterly Journal of Science Mr. Samuelson has contributed an historical paper on the subject, in which he sets forth first the present state of the controversy, which has been carried on rather warmly—by those who assert that germs of life are to be found in the atmosphere (especially by Pouchet, Jelly, and Musset, in France ; Dr. Jeffreys Wyman, of Boston, U.S.; Schaffhausen, in Germany, and Hallier, in Italy), and by those who maintain that the atmosphere is the chief source whence such organisms spring (Pasteur and Joubert, in France, Dr. Child, in Boston, Schaaf, and Schreiber, in Germany). Mr. Samuelson's paper is illustrated with engravings. He expresses the opinion that those forms considered by their former party to be living independent organisms have no more right to the term than white blood-corpuscles. Dr. Child, of Boston, U.S., and Dr. Bastian, of the popular sense of the term 'spontaneous generation' I am certainly no believer ; and I have little doubt that, as in the case of distant when all those lowly types, now known as protozoa, will be traced in their earliest stages to the atmosphere, the dust of the air, the waters of springs, and, indeed, into every place into which dust and air penetrate. It is the common-sense explanation of these facts, and I believe that this is the only one which will ever be adopted by the public. Dr. Bastian, in his paper, styled "Father Ignatius," must be a bold man to assert that the atmosphere is the chief source whence such organisms spring (Pasteur and Joubert, in France, Dr. Child, in Boston, Schaaf, and Schreiber, in Germany). OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

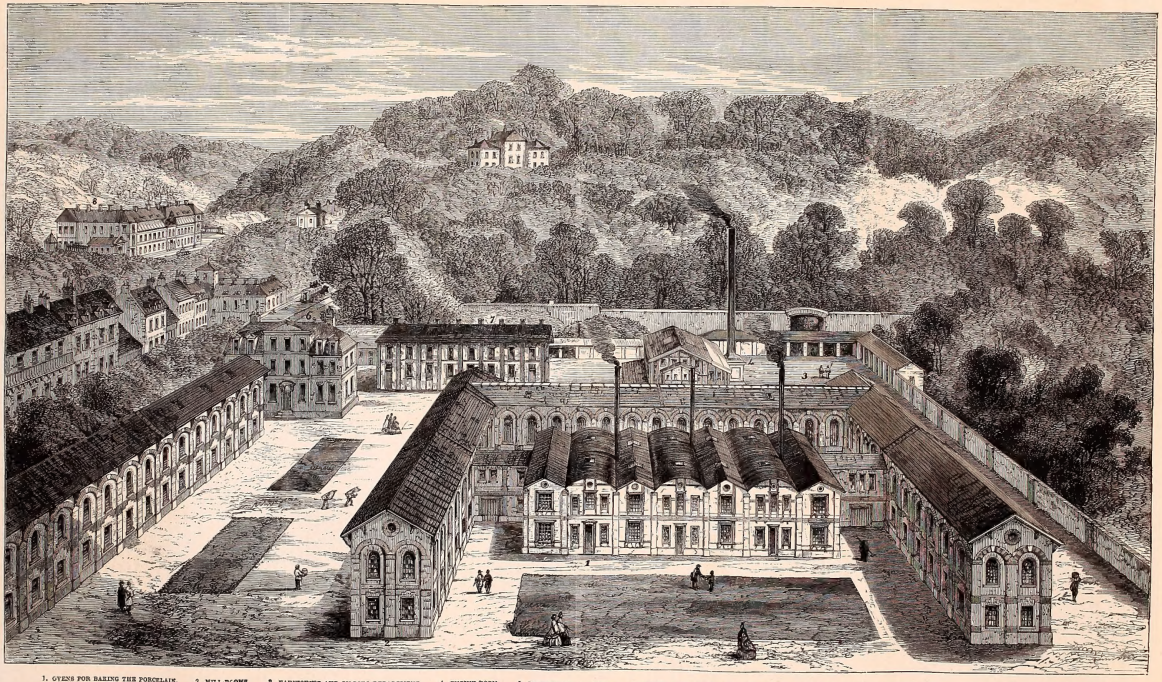
THE HON. AND VERY REV. GEORGE SPENCER.

The Hon. and Very Rev. George Spencer, a clergyman of the Church of Rome, and a superior of the Passionists, being the principal of a body of that order now established at Sutton, in Surrey, was a younger brother of Frederick, second Earl Spencer, K.G., by his wife Lavinia, eldest daughter of Charles, first Earl of Lucan, and was thus a paternal statesman John Charles, third Earl Spencer, Chancellor of the Exchequer as Lord Althorp, and of Frederick, fourth Earl Spencer, the present Lord Chamberlain. George Spencer, who was born Dec. 21, 1799, and was educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, where he graduated in 1822, having, in 1820, taken holy orders in the Church of England, he was presented by his father, Earl Spencer, to the family living of Althorp, in Northamptonshire, and, holding it from 1824 to 1830, and then, at a time when he would in all probability have been made a bishop, he resigned his preferment in the Established Church and entered the communion of the Church of Rome. He employed himself some time at Rome in severe study, was ordained priest by Cardinal Weld, and, having received the strict and self-denying Order of Passionists, one of whose main occupations is to preach and exercise the cure of souls, he returned to England, and, preaching on foot, throughout the length and breadth of England, Ireland, and Scotland, and on the Continent, he became, in 1841, superior of a house, which was a mendicant Friar, oft in the rude garb of his order, the descendant of the great Duke of Marlborough, and a cousin to English Earl, the friend of his Lord Chamberlain, and the brother of two Earls, one of them a leading statesman and the other a Knight of the Garter, and the head of a house which was no enthusiastic or fiery convert. He was the simplest and most modest of men, in conversation and in manner, and his demeanour was that of a gentleman in manners peculiarly gentle, intellectual and agreeable. Whatever he was he was thoroughly earnest in all he undertook, and his life was one clear sight he did all for conscience sake, without the least pretension, and his character secured him the respect of all who knew him. He had been engaged, staying at Carshalton, the seat of his friend Mr. Scott Joseph, in writing a book, and, being ill, sent for a priest to go to his room, but, finding it had started, was returning his seat when he fell down on the floor, and was found dead. He was immediately expired, for two persons passing found him just dead. He died before he had time to receive the last rites of the Church. He was in his 65th year. Very Rev. George Spencer, styled "Father Ignatius," must be a bold man to assert that the atmosphere is the chief source of a barnacle who present, as connected with Church-of-England monastic institutions. Beyond his name, Father Ignatius, there was no connection, nor aught in relationship, or in common, between them.

MR. COMMISSIONER PANE.

Robert George Cecil Pane, Esq., Assistant Judge of the Court of Bankruptcy, who died on the 4th inst., was the sixth surviving son of the Hon. Henry Pane, M.P., by his wife, Anne, daughter of Stephen Cassan, eighth Earl of Westmoreland, and brother of the present Earl, Henry Pane, of Twyford, Commissioner-in-Chief in India, and of General Middlemay Pane, still surviving. He was born in 1797, and was educated at Westminster and Christchurch College, Oxford, where he took a first class in classics, and was also by private tuition. He was called to the bar in 1819. Having practised to the bar in 1819, he practised as an equity barrister until he was appointed a Commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy in Lincoln's Inn. He held the office of that office, which he held to his death, with high distinction, displaying profound learning, great acuteness, and the strictest sense of justice. He was particularly remarkable for the able elucidation which he brought to bear upon the many important and difficult questions connected with which constantly occupied his attention. He was an accomplished scholar and a man of high literary attainments, and charitable disposition. His donations to relieve distress were large, and one of the very last acts of his life was to send a handsome contribution to the widow of a barrister who had practised in his court. The learned Commissioner was fond of manly sports, and was great in the hunting field. That long his favourite mode of recreation when he could get from Basinghall-street to the more congenial atmosphere of Fulbeck, his family seat in Lincolnshire. Mr. Commissioner Pane married, first, on the 24th of June, 1835, Isabella Mary, cousin paternally of Sir Edward Blackett, Bart., of Matfen, and niece of James, successively Baroness Dufferin and Claneboye, and by her, who survives him, he leaves two sons and two daughters.

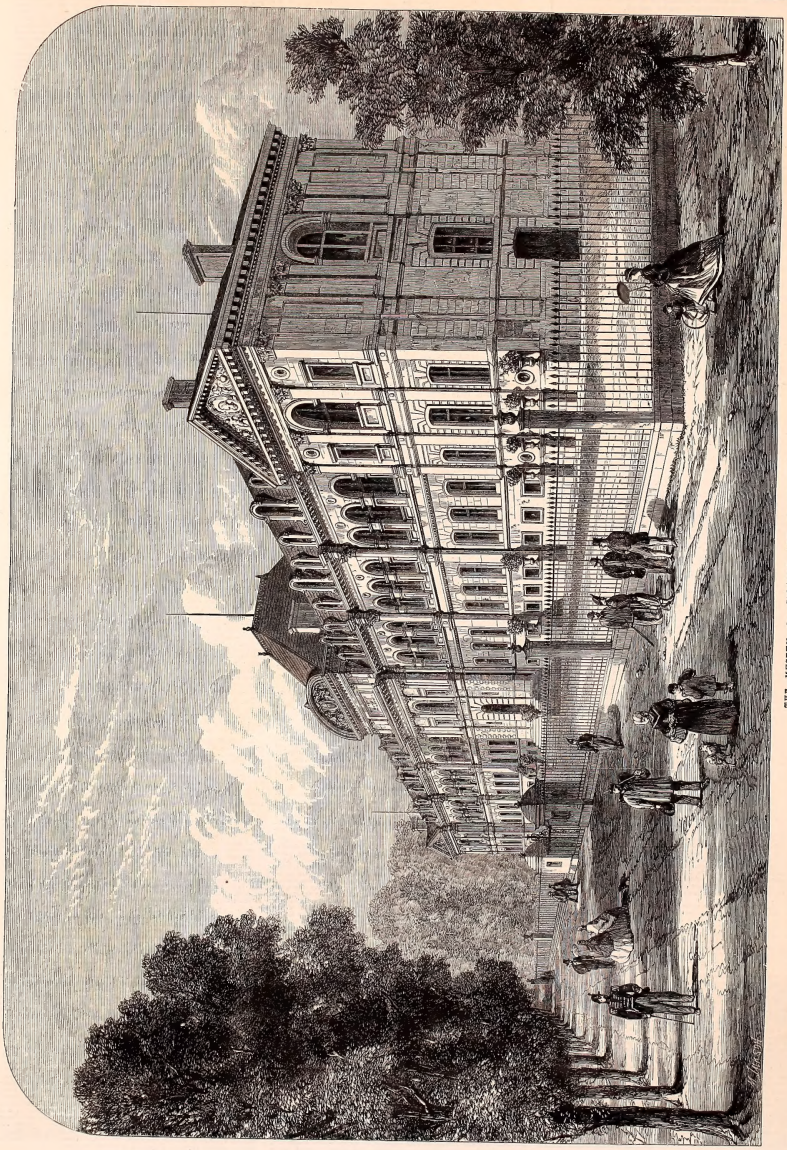
CHARLES WINSTON, ESQ.



This gentleman, whose sudden death occurred on the 3rd inst., as his obituaries, I. Harcourt-court, Harcourt-buildings, was a member of a highly respectable family, and the son of a clergyman. He was born in 1814, and was called to the bar by the Hon. Society of the Inner Temple in Michaelmas Term, 1840, after he had previously practised some time as a Special Pleader. He was the Rose Control in the Court of Chancery, and in addition to his practice in court frequently sat as a Deputy County-court Judge. Mr. Winston was not, however, a mere lawyer, but had a great taste for literature, and especially for chemistry. He was also profoundly learned and an able writer in the subject of antiquities, and published a work on "Ancient Stained-glass Painting," which, entitled "Hints on Stained-glass Painting," is a standard book on the subject. It is the historic and technical. A fine specimen of this art in the Temple Church was a donation from Mr. Winston. He was widely honourable gentleman, and of a very amiable and social disposition, and was much loved and esteemed by a large circle of friends.

Sir Charles Henry Coote, premier baronet of Ireland, and for many years M.P. for Queen's county, died in London on Saturday last.

Admiral De Hell died recently, aged eighty, at his residence, the Château de Cherbich, near Oriental (Ille-Silin). His parents had been ruined by the Revolution, compelling Du Hell entered the French army as a cadet-boy, and by his good conduct, talent, and gallantry, rose to the rank of Rear-Admiral.



The French papers announce the death of Count Horace de Vielcastel, a grand-nephew of Mirabeau, member of an old French family, and known in grand-seigneur of Mirabeau, member of an old French family, and known as Paris as a writer of fiction, also on art and archæology, and as a journalist.

THE NEW SÈVRES PORCELAIN MANUFACTORY IN THE PARK OF SAINT CLOUD.

THE products of the manufactory of Sèvres constitute one of the greatest artistic and industrial glories of France, and are everywhere highly appreciated by porcelain buyers. So early as 1738, the Marquis de Fulvy erected his entire fortune to the creation and improvement of a porcelain manufactory in the château of Vincennes. Already the year 1750 the fermiers généraux became the proprietors of that establishment and transferred it to Sèvres, where they had constructed the quaint-looking building which has been so frequently visited by English and other tourists. It was within a new on the point of being abandoned in favour of the splendid new edifice just completed in the Park of Saint Cloud. Ever since 1793, when Louis XV. purchased the factory, the establishment has either belonged to the Crown or to the State, and it is now under the immediate protection of the Imperial Government, who have done everything possible to encourage the genius of the Sèvres porcelain by decreeing the erection of a series of new buildings in a superb workyard of the old-fashioned ornamental style, with beautiful objects of art hitherto produced in the old factory are lovingly laid.

It must be remembered that the Sèvres establishment is not only a manufactory of porcelain, but also a museum containing collections of the curious productions of all countries and ages, representing the most valuable specimens of vases, statues, and other objects produced by artists who flourished in the earliest times, and during the various periods of Etruscan, Greek, and Roman civilisation. The growing importance of these collections and the requirements necessitated by the continually increasing demand for artistic porcelain have stimulated the French Government to provide an establishment suitable both for a factory and a museum; and the highest interests have been duly carried out under the superintendence of M. Laudin, the able architect of the fine building and its dependencies which we illustrate in our present Number.

The new Imperial manufactory is picturesquely situated just inside the Sèvres entrance to the Park of Saint Cloud, from which it is a space of about 38,000 square yards has been set apart for the purpose of the establishment, nearly one fourth of this surface being occupied by the different buildings, the details of which are shown in one of our Engravings, with the former manufactory in the distance. The principal front of the new building extends from the entrance of the park is 100 yards in length. The basement of this portion of the new establishment is reserved for the kilns, and the moulds; on the ground floor are the sale-rooms, the offices, and the judges' room; and the first story the Musée Ceramique, illustrating the complete history of ceramics, comprising, in the most methodical and chronological arrangement, specimens of all epochs, from those of Egypt, Nineveh, and Babylon, down to the present day.

The ensemble of the new manufactory, as well as its importance in an architectural point of view, will be well understood by a reference to our bird's-eye view of the whole establishment from M. Félix Thorigny, under the immediate supervision of M. Laudin. The different buildings comprise, besides the large factory for the moulding, for the varnishing and gilding, for the painting, for the machinery, and for the directors' administration; and every effort has been made by the architect to render them commodious, and every facilities even the improvement—if improvement be still possible—of the beautiful art-manufactures of Sèvres.

THE DISTRESS IN LANCASHIRE.

The monthly meeting of the Lancashire Central Relief Committee was held, on Monday, in the Townhall, Manchester, the Earl of Derby in the chair; there being also present Sir James Kay Shuttleworth, Bart.; Lord Egerton of Tatton; Lord Houghton, M.P.; Lord Ashburton, M.P.; the Mayor of Manchester; Messrs. B. Gladstone, James Worrall, S. J. Stern, E. Ashworth, J. R. Kay, D. Bright, M.P.; Thomas Bazley, M.P.; A. Ashworth, Rathbone, H. B. Farnall, J. Goodair, A. H. Heywood, Hugh Mason, T. Ashton, Hugh Mason, jun., and W. Machon (secretary). Mr. Mc. Rawlinson, the Government engineer, was also in attendance.

On the motion of Sir J. K. Shuttleworth, seconded by Colonel Patten, it was resolved that the committee should meet on each of the two succeeding Mondays.

The draught of a report to be submitted to the General Committee was considered, and, with certain alterations, adopted.

Mr. Rawlinson presented the following report to the committee:—"By the last return for the month of September, 4879 were employed on the various public works within the several towns, parishes, and districts. 2738 of this number of men came on the works from cotton manufactures. There are a large number of men also at work boring, getting and carting stone and flags for street paving, and other purposes. The commencement of public works in the distressed cotton districts, 370,000 tons of paving stones and flags have been raised, squared, and prepared for use in course of laying in the roads and in flagging footways. As stated in my last report, there are some cotton towns, parishes, and districts in which the aid of the rates. Additional men will be employed immediately at Preston, Blackburn, Ashton-under-Lyne, Bolton, Oldham, Rochdale, and other towns. The works suspended during the summer in the unions of Bolton, Chorley, and Rochdale will be at once resumed, and other works of a similar and improving nature to those already in operation. Orders have been given for 40,000 more wheelbarrows, and 10,000 shovels, to be forwarded to Preston, Blackburn, Bolton, Rochdale, and Ashton-under-Lyne. There are now 1,188,840 yards of flannel and calico in the distressed districts, and 1,000,000 yards more are expected to arrive in the course of next week. Of this number of yards, 1,000,000 are flannel, and 200,000 calico. Barrels of rice, 4000 barrels of flour, and 1000 barrels of oatmeal are also expected to arrive in the course of next week. THE FARM.

THE report of the stewards of stock in the Royal Agricultural Journal proves how hard it is to induce each set of judges to furnish a joint account of the classes they have sifted. Disappointed exhibitors entertain such exaggerated notions of the merits of their animals, and often make such a very personal matter of their defeat, that it requires some nerve to undertake the office of judge, and still more to rend in a resumé of your labours. Still, the implement judges do it, and brave the wrath of the defeated duties (whose apposite for correspondence and bickering is absolutely vexatious) with a most systematic and elaborate manner. The yearling-bull class seems to have been a source of the greatest difficulty to the judges, each judge to each judge took a different fancy. Mr. Parkinson considers that if there was a mistake it consisted in putting Mr. Booth's Prince of Batterea third instead of Mr. Fawke's Lord Surrey: but de mortuis nil nisi bonum. We agree with Mr. Dent that three judges are preferable to five, as in the latter case the final judgments would be made by two, provided each stock steward were as liberty to bring up the rear at the expense of the time of experienced referee, who should decide when there is a dead-lock. Under the present system, with the three judges, we men at strong will, we have sometimes a species of very protracted tarradiddle indeed. Then, if one is disposed to play the magnifico, and a third is rather yielding and nervous, it becomes a matter of bargaining how the prize leg is practically done by one man, and he often not by any means the soundest of the three. It is a great check on a man who wants to carry things with a high hand against a single colleague, to know that he may be perpetually signed by the clinching remark, "Well, we'll send for the referee," who would not know what the animal each man stood upon. Again, if there is complicated voting, little misunderstandings gradually spring up between two: "I'll vote for your beast if you'll bring mine in next to it, and keep out his," and then comes the question of the relative value of being sacrificed, to say the least of it. The field from which shorthorn judges can be chosen is sadly limited on account of the strong rival Booth and Bates interests, with which the best and best judges are so saturated; and hence we cannot altogether wonder at the jealousy excited by certain appointments of judges.

In the horse department, Mr. Milward recommends, with good reason, that there should be a year's interval between agricultural pairs and three-year-old calculate to make carriage horses: "The agricultural horse should be divided into classes not exceeding 14½ hands and 15; and that in the classes for drag horses there should be no limit to the weight in foal or with a foal, and the £2 fee for each horse-box, should be abolished. He also puts in his report against the exclusion of mares from the hunter-size class horses like Escott, Safeguard, &c., because they are not in the studbook. As long as such a class does exist, we doubt the policy of excluding any horse with the requisite of looks, seeing that "at least three crosses" is the qualification for the best hunter given in Yorkshire; but we cannot see the necessity of having a separate class at all, and would rather have £40 and £25 as second and third prizes in the £100 open class.

Mr. Randell, the sheep and pig steward, gives some of the sheep exhibitors "a first warning" as to unfair shearing, as, although only three Montagu Browlow were disqualified, "there were many more in other cases open to a "suspicion that the shearing condition had not been literally fulfilled." The Hampshire and other shearlings, he thinks, have been most communicative: and it is amusing to note how one of them remarks, with evident pride, that Mr. King's second shearling is "a very large old-fashioned ram," or, as the steward puts it, "the very slight notice which the pig part of the show generally receives from the judges is atoned for by the liberality with which it is usually done into details, and even the absence of "any tail to speak of" is pointed out in Victor, a Suffolk pricetaker, as "too often the first symptom of in-and-in breeding."

In speaking of the contest of steam-ploughs working seven inches deep, the Implement Report says: "Fowler worked with two seven-horse single-cylinder engines, acting simultaneously, on opposite headlands. Both engines are fitted with alternate barrels. It was suggested that a great improvement would result if the engines could be made to work together. This was then considered impracticable, and yet in one short year we have the idea matured. A great step has been taken in the science of ploughing, and though much may fairly be claimed as the result of that prize system which has been in some quarters so rashly and sweepingly condemned. And how has this been brought about? By a simple and inexpensive though ingenious alteration in details: formerly the joints which connect the different lengths of rope (solid steel round) round the drums, and the anchor-pulley, and which at a certain position would cause an obstruction and consequent fracture to the 400-yard rope worked round the clip-drum: the joints travelled round the anchor sheave, and the length of former ropes did not exceed about 350 yards. These pulleys are now hung upon an upright axis, and take the motion, which allows them to give way when the rope passes. They are brought back to their position by the action of an indiarubber spring which connects them together, and is strong enough to keep the pulleys properly pressing on the rope. This arrangement works admirably; and during the two-days' trials to which these ropes were subjected we never found that the rope exhibited any tendency to slip, so perfect was the grip of the clip-drums."

The Southwicke sale was nothing very remarkable, as the forty-seven heads only averaged £31 1s. 10d. This was, in a measure, owing to the "doubts as to the intentions" of Clarionet, Hesse, Cashmere, and Fenella 3rd. The former of these and eight others went to Mr. Bicke of Pile. Mr. Carrington defeated Mr. Townsend's agent for Southwick Cherry Flower (100 gs.), and would not be denied for Southwick Cherry Flower 2nd (100 gs.) and Rose of Rose of Cashmere goes to Cumberland; and Mersex. Mitchell bought a heifer calf, Guernilla.

Mr. Rowland has purchased from Mr. Atkinson of Peepy the old cow Beauty 3rd (bred by Colonel Townley, and sold by him some years ago), along with her daughter, Beauty 4th, by the Prince Patrick. Rosette, Emma, and Stella are at Royal Butterfly's quarters, and a white heifer calf has come to the hands of Weatherby, bred by Bighthorn. These Thorneyholme shorthorns have had abundance of grass all the summer and autumn, whilst their less fortunate neighbours in Craven have been parched up. Mr. Wrigglesham, Lord Suffield judged the cobs which were entered for his own £5 prize, and lamented that they were not up to the old Suffield standard which he had in his eye. The Bedfordshire Society has held a middling meeting at Biggleswade. Mr. Parkinson has parted with Old Pearl, a purchase from Townsley, a yearling bull, and a three-year-old heifer. Lady Pigot's Perfume, another of Oulsnam's progeny, and to our minds, one of the very best-looking of the Townsley sale, was an easy first in the two-year-olds; while Lady of Rookes, and all her produce, from Sir Lancaster, has had to give away several months and resign the first yearling; heifer prize to one of Mr. Crosby's. Mr. Hudson's bull was also second in the heifer-calf class to Mr. Charles Howard's Fanny Gwynne; and Mr. Lynn's Pride, from Lincolnshire, won the Biggleswade cup for the best cow or heifer for breeding purposes. The Howards, Charles and James, were in the front with their Oxford lambs, cross-bred sweepings, and the last struck among the fat beasts was a Hereford steer, bred by the late Mr. Rea of Bromsnaghy. The sale of the late Mr. Thomas Rea's herd takes place at Webtonbury, near Pershore, on Thursday. The day has been happily selected so as to suit the buyers of Herefords, who will be in the county from all parts to attend Mr. Hereford show and fair on the two previous days. The herd is literally an offshoot or part of the Moundsley one, which was dispersed by Messrs. Russell last autumn, and in the hands of its late owner (who met an untimely death from an accident in the hunting-field) it well kept up its prestige, through Sir Benjamin, Sir Richard, Sylvius, Bella, Eva, Kate, the Second Lucy, Cherry, Spangle the Second, and other pretenders. There are seventy-six single lots and seven pairs of steers and fifteen of the lots are by Sir Benjamin, Otters are multiplying fast in the Rivers Ribben, in Ayrshire, and they destroy great quantities of trout.

His Excellency also refuses to allow regimental bands to European regiments who were transferred to the service of the Crown should have been allowed to retain Indian pay and allowances, and that the measure would be a serious injustice to the officers of those corps, and contrary to the guarantee given to the Indian service.

CANADA.

THE Governor of Canada has summoned the colonial governors to a conference, to be held at Quebec this month, for the purpose of arranging the confederation of the British provinces.

The delegates from Canada, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island, who attended the Convention, held first at Charlestown, and then at Quebec, assembled in the Province Building, were received by the delegates of Nova Scotia, on the 12th of September, at the Halifax Club. Mr. Tupper, provincial secretary, was in the chair; the Hon. W. A. Henry (attorney-general), acting as vice-chairman. All the Canadian Ministers in Halifax were present. Speeches were delivered by Mr. Tupper, Mr. Whelan, Mr. Archibald, Governor Gordon, Admiral Sir James Hope, Dr. Tupper, Hons. Mr. Curtiss, George Brown, Mr. Tilley, Colonel Gray, Mr. Shea, Mr. Palmer, and D'Arcy McGee. The first of the leading speeches bore special reference to the proposed confederation of the British North American provinces, a subject which now occupies the minds of the colonial politicians and people. The British Colonist of Halifax reports the speeches delivered on the occasion.

Young Canada (otherwise the Rough party), is organising an opposition to the proposed confederation of the British North American provinces; and the organ of the party, Le Nationale, denounces the scheme in strong language. It is thought, however, that no Lower Canadian influence will itself, be effectual in retarding this political measure in other quarters. At present no satisfactory or general outline of the scheme has been arranged, but it is hoped, that a scheme be agreed upon by its promoters.

The proposed federation of the Governments of the various provinces was to be held at Quebec on the 10th of October, by order of the Imperial Government, for the purpose of deliberating and coming to some definite arrangement respecting the federation scheme, when, should anything like unanimity prevail, immediate legislative action will be taken in the matter.

In 1862, a despatch was sent out by the Duke of Newcastle to Lord Mulgrave, then Governor-General of Canada, stating the willingness of the Imperial Government to entertain a proposition for the union of Canada with the Lower Provinces; but, as the scheme had to originate and be agreed upon, in the first instance, by the colonies themselves, the suggestion of the Duke of Newcastle was not then acted upon.

Lord Lyons has been on a visit to his Excellency Viscount Monck. One object of his Lordship's visit was to confer with the Canadian Government about alterations likely to be proposed in the Reciprocity Treaty.

THE CONVENTION BETWEEN FRANCE AND ITALY.

THE Moniteur publishes the documents relating to the arrangements between France and Italy for the evacuation of Rome by the French troops and the transference of the Italian capital from Turin to Florence. The documents are the text of the original Convention, with an explanatory protocol and declaration, and a despatch from M. Drouyn de Lhuys to the French Minister at Turin. Translations of the papers are given below :—

CONVENTION BETWEEN FRANCE AND ITALY.

Their Majesties the Emperor of the French and the King of Italy, having resolved to conclude a Convention, named for their plenipotentiaries as follows :—The Emperor of the French, M. Drouyn de Lhuys, Senator of the Empire, Grand Cross of the Imperial Order of the Legion of Honour, and of the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus, &c., his Minister and Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; and his Majesty the King of Italy, the Chevalier Constantin Nigra, Grand Cross of the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus, Grand Officer of the Imperial Order of the Legion of Honour, &c., his Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to his Majesty the Emperor of the French; who, after having communicated their full respective powers found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles :—

ART. 1. Italy undertakes not to attack the present territory of the Pope, and not to prevent by force any attack against the said territory proceeding from within.

ART. 2. France will withdraw her troops gradually as the army of the Pope becomes organised. The evacuation will nevertheless be accomplished within two years.

ART. 3. The French Government will make no protest against the organisation of a papal army, even though composed of foreign elements, sufficient to maintain the authority of the Holy Father and tranquillity both at home and on the frontier of the Papal States; provided, however, that this force does not degenerate into a means of attack against the Italian Government.

ART. 4. Italy declares herself ready to enter into an arrangement for assuming a proportional part of the debt of the former States of the Church.

ART. 5. The present Convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications exchanged within a fortnight, or earlier if possible.

In faith whereof the undersigned Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention and have appended thereto their seals.

Done in duplicate at Paris, the 15th day of the month of September of the year of grace eighteen-hundred and sixty-four.

PROTOCOL.

A protocol following the Convention says :—

The Convention signed this day sets forth the desire of their Majesties the Emperor of the French and the King of Italy to see only become executive when the King of Italy shall have decreed the transfer of the capital of the kingdom to a place effected within a term of six months from the date of the Convention, and the ratifications will be exchanged at the time of the Convention, and the ratifications will be exchanged at the same time as the Convention. Done in duplicate at Paris, the 15th day of September, 1864.

DECLARATION.

According to the terms of the Convention of Sept. 15, and the protocol appended thereto, the day for the transfer of the capital is fixed at six months from the date of the Convention, and the evacuation of Rome by the French troops is to be effected within the term of two years, dating from the decree ordering the transfer of the capital. The French Plenipotentiaries declare that the latter measure might be taken by virtue of a decree to be immediately issued by the King of Italy. This hypothesis would be realised in the event of the Pope not being to date almost simultaneous, and the Italian Government would have had for the same time, and the Turin Cabinet considered necessary. But while, on the one hand, the Italian Government would have had for the transfer of the capital, on the other, the change in the Italian Ministry which has taken place in consequence of the Convention of Sept. 15 has rendered it important to examine the proposition of the Italian Government, which demands the transfer of the capital to Florence. Under these circumstances the French Government, while declaring its readiness to put to one the time the reasons which have induced the Italian Government to depart from the plan it has hitherto been forced to oppose to the suggestions of Turin.

Public opinion called upon in the month of October, 1862, to explain myself upon a communication made to the Chambers by the Cabinet of Turin, to which right of Italy to Rome, declared a retractation of that capital and the dispossession of the Holy Father, I was obliged to declare that I believe it upon the part of Europe, in the name of which I spoke, that we could not ourselves to any negotiation which should not have for its object the settlement of the Roman interests, which could not have for its conclusion the solution of the two one of which we were quite decided not to separate. Since that time, the most friendly relations have existed between the two States. Having taken into consideration the propositions which might be made to us, we frequently, we added that it would be always for us to be ready to examine them when they should appear to us of a nature to bring about the result we desired to obtain. It is in that spirit that we have received the various overtures which have since been made to us, although they have not presented with sufficient completeness to have given rise to bases for an acceptable arrangement.

My Colleagues, at the same time, with great interest the progress of the disciplined itself in the general situation of Italy. The Italian Government impressed with manifest desire to consolidate order, and to increase gradually weakened by the effect of time and of reflection. Moderate ideas tended to prevail in the Chamber and minds, and to open the way to serious attempts agreement. In these favourable circumstances the Government of King Victor Emmanuel has determined to take the initiative in measures, which the necessity of giving more cohesion to the organisation of Italy, it augmented with the public opinion. Convinced that the administrative reforms declared it to transfer the capital of the kingdom to a more central point than Turin. The Emperor, appreciating the high motives which have inspired and taking into account both the considerations I have just stated and the Government, sincerely disposed to carry out the Cabinet of Turin, thought that the time had arrived to settle the conditions which would permit him to put an end to the provisional occupation of Rome, by the means of securing the security of the Holy Father and his possessions. The Convention of Sept. 15 has responded to this object. It fulfils all the necessities of the respective situations of Italy and Rome. It will contribute, we hope, to hasten a reconciliation we desire between the Holy See and Italy. The Emperor has not ceased to recommend in the common interest of the Holy See and of Italy.

As soon as the progress of the negotiations permitted us to hope for their success, I took care to communicate to the Court of Rome the understanding by which we had been guided in this matter, and I addressed to his Majesty's Ambassador the despatch of which I send you a copy annexed. I have ordered to announce to him the signature of the Convention, and to acquaint him with its clauses, in order that he might communicate them to the Italian Government.

I hope the Court of Rome will appreciate our motives and the guarantees we have stipulated in its interest. If at first sight it was disposed to view with less favour the arrangement which has been concluded with a Power from which it is still separated by the memory of recent disputes, I cannot believe that, on reflection, it will not doubt that the sincerity of the loyal and sincere execution of the engagements of the 15th of September.

THE MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO BARON DE MALARET, AT TURIN.

Paris, Sept. 15, 1864.

"M. le Baron,—You are aware that the Emperor's Government has decided upon entering into an arrangement with the Cabinet of Turin to settle the conditions upon which the evacuation of Rome by our troops should be carried out. I have just honour to communicate to you the text of the Convention, which was signed for this purpose on the 15th inst., between the Plenipotentiaries of his Majesty the King of Italy and myself. To-day we have received the ratifications of the Emperor and of King Victor Emmanuel.

I believe it unnecessary to call your attention to the circumstances which have preceded the conclusion of this important act, and to point out to you at the same time the reasons which have induced us to adopt the determination to depart from the plan it has hitherto been forced to oppose to the suggestions of Turin.

Public opinion called upon in the month of October, 1862, to explain myself upon a communication made to the Chambers by the Cabinet of Turin, to which right of Italy to Rome, declared a retractation of that capital and the dispossession of the Holy Father, I was obliged to declare that I believe it upon the part of Europe, in the name of which I spoke, that we could not ourselves to any negotiation which should not have for its object the settlement of the Roman interests, which could not have for its conclusion the solution of the two one of which we were quite decided not to separate. THE Government emigrant-ship St. Hilda, 1000 tons, belonging to Messrs. John Jones and Co., Liverpool, sailed from Plymouth on the 5th instant for Sydney, New South Wales, with 370 Government emigrants, consisting of married people and children, 110 single men, 103 single women, thirty-two boys and twenty-six girls between one and twelve years of age, and seven infants under the care of Mr. Charles B. Graham, surgeon superintendent, assisted by Mrs. C. Wale, matron, and Mr. M. Mahill, schoolmaster.

The Home Office has instituted inquiries as to the quantity of gunpowder in store in the several localities where it is kept to any large amount. There is a provision respecting the quantity kept where the manufacture is conducted. There is also a limitation of the amount kept on hand by the licensed retailers of the article. There are also stringent regulations for the protection of the Government stores by sea and land. But it is in the large warehouses of the manufacturers and wholesale dealers that the greatest quantities are to be found; and it is to them that the new legislation on the subject will be specially directed.

A JAPANESE WOOD-ENGRAVER.

THE JAPANESE WOOD-ENGRAVER.

We give another Illustration of the Japanese costumes and manners, from a sketch by our Artist at Yokohama. It is painful here to observe the uncomfortable position of the Japanese engraver at his work—to see how he is doubled up at the apology for a table, and in what an awkward way he holds the style. But we are amused when we look at his wonderful spectacles, tied round his ears with a piece of string. The instruments he uses are of the simplest description; and his wood is not hard, like our boxwood, but extremely soft. His mode of operation is this:—The subject to be engraved is first drawn on a thin piece of paper with Indian ink and a Japanese paint-brush. The drawing is then reversed and pasted on the wood. The paper is oiled and left on the wood till the engraving is finished. All the black lines in the drawing are thus left in relief. The block is then washed and covered with printing-ink made of lampblack and glue. The printing is performed by laying a clean sheet of paper on the block and pressing the surface, by hand, with a round tool covered with a dried leaf. This operation goes on till thousands of copies are printed. The Japanese also print in colours, by having different blocks of wood for the different colours.

"LOCH ERICHT—A BRIGHT NIGHT," BY A. GILBERT, FROM THE LAST WINTER EXHIBITION.

No. 1284.—VOL. XLV. SATURDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1864. WITH A SUPPLEMENT, FIVEPENCE

MR. GLADSTONE IN LANCASHIRE.

THE country which is proud of Pitt, of Fox, of Lyndhurst, of Brougham, of Peel, and of Palmerston, is not likely to be ashamed of Gladstone. Party politics aside, his endowments and achievements give him a claim as a public man to the liveliest interest of his countrymen. There is room for a large difference of opinion as to his political views, principles, and career; but all are agreed as to the legitimacy of the demand made by his transcendent abilities and his spotless character upon their admiration. He is one of the brightest illustrations, one of the most sparkling ornaments, of our Parliamentary system, which, from Sir John Elliott's time down to now, may be said to be "justified of its children."

Mr. Gladstone is a Lancashire man, and is felt by his native county to do it honour. Probably, in visiting it as a public man and as a Minister of the Crown, he also is sensible of the ties which specially connect him with that district of the kingdom. No living man has done more than he to put the last gloss of brilliancy upon the commercial system which Lancashire claims to have shaped—none more than he exhibits the solidity of Lancashire virtues. He carries with him to the locality of his birth the world-wide honours he has won, and, with a heart still throbbing with sympathy for the people among whom he was reared, he claims to be received as one of themselves. Who can affect surprise at the warmth of the welcome accorded to him? The time of his visit is most apt. Lancashire is beginning to see her way out of the abyss of affliction into which the cotton famine had plunged her, and to the commercial treaty with France, which the Chancellor's eloquence prevailed upon Parliament to adopt, hardly less than to her own manly energy and fortitude, the fact is due that Lancashire can look the world in the face without a misgiving. The tail of the storm which is upon her only serves to remind her of the severity of the crisis through which she has passed; and he and she can rejoice together over the happy issue which is now fully assured. If his speeches, under such circumstances, are somewhat couleur de rose, what cynic can reasonably blame him? If his audiences were more grateful than critical, who can wonder? There was a common ground for congratulation to speaker and hearers, and it is no marvel that both indulged freely in an exultant vein.

But Mr. Gladstone, as an orator, is not by any means dependent upon felicitous occasions. He can gracefully turn them to account; but it is questionable whether in doing so he displays the athletic vigour of his eloquence so fully as when he confronts all but insuperable difficulties. He discourses so fluently, so elegantly, with such cojcuuess of illustration, and with such logical conformity to first principles, that one would be tempted to imagine a popular assembly to be his most appropriate sphere, were it not that his grandest triumphs have been achieved in the Senate. He possesses most of the qualifications for both; nor can it be said of him, as of some others, that he greatly varies his style, as if conscious of a wide interval between the intelligence of the one and the other. He appears at all times to cherish such a respect for his audience and for himself, that he never lets himself down below the high level of intellectual and logical declamation upon which he is so peculiarly at home. The character of his audience may determine, to some extent, the selection of his topics, and even his method of treating them, but he never sinks into slovenliness. Whether his object be disputation or discussion, he brings to it the same fulness of information, the same fastidious choice of diction, the same fertility of apt illustration the same intellectual vigour, the same exalted tone of moral culture. He is always in earnest. He can, indeed, hit hard; but he prefers to convince and persuade. The stream of his oratory foams and splashes when it meets with irremovable obstructions; but for the most part it flows on in ample volume—rapid, but majestically calm—bearing his audience, of whatever class it may consist, irresistibly with him.

We shall not need to corroborate these observations by any special reference to his several speeches in Lancashire, whether delivered at Bolton, at Liverpool, or at Manchester. The time has passed for comparing them one with the others, noting their distinctive topics, and pointing out the happy adaptation of each to the occasion. It is not with this view that we have chosen our theme. Our purpose rather is to draw from the whole series some of those inferences which, in our judgment, they warrant, and which interest us, not on party, but on national grounds.

It is a matter of no slight advantage, surely, to the public spirit of this country that, at a time like the present, the rising generation of politicians should have before them an attractive and worthy model of the British statesman. Putting out of view Mr. Gladstone's political opinions, and leaving every one to decide for himself how far they are in accordance with truth and how far they err from it, we believe it will be generally admitted that there is not a school of politics in this country that would not rejoice to have the Chancellor of the Exchequer for its exponent. And this not solely, not perhaps mainly, on account of his intellectual ability. His conscientiousness, his indefatigable industry, the generosity of his impulses, his unquestionable sincerity, his reverence for the past, his hopefulness of the future, and his religious earnestness, combine to make up a public man of whom all parties may well be proud. His practical sagacity, his capacity for business, his fertility of resource, and his genial sympathy with his fellow-men, irrespective of all class distinctions, not confined even to country or clime, add to the public man some of the highest qualifications of the statesman. Possessing ample wealth, he devotes himself wholly to the public service. With unlimited opportunities for self-indulgence, he lives a blameless life. Commanding free access to the highest social circles, he buries himself with the needs and grievances, with the interests and liabilities of the poor and mute aspirations, of the poor. Many may deem his plans mistaken; some may denounce his principles as subversive; but none will refuse to him the praise of being animated by grand and unselfish motives. He cares for men as men, interests himself in their welfare, and throws his whole soul into whatever he undertakes on their behalf. His character his career, his success, cannot but have an elevating influence upon public life in England. This is a part of the service he is rendering to his country which all are prone to overlook, but which cannot be too highly appreciated. The debt incurred to him in this respect will be revealed to us more fully here after. The healthful stimulus which his example is now minister ing to youthful and susceptible minds, and the guidance he is giving to nascent benevolence, the altered tone he is giving to party will disclose. Meanwhile, however, the obligations due to him are above computation; and, much as we all owe him for his legislative achievements, we shall probably owe him far more for the silent influence of his character and life.

One cannot but be sensible, moreover, of a double influence for good exercised by the direct contact of first-rate with ordinary minds on occasions such as those which took Mr. Gladstone into Lancashire. There is nothing more likely to quicken, nothing better adapted to confirm, the patriotic aspirations of a statesman than being brought more or less face to face with the people. Like Antæus, touching his mother earth, he strengthens thereby his most disinterested motives. He reads in their countenances, he sees in their eager attention, he hears in their hearty acclamations, a grateful appreciation of his labours. On the other hand, the people themselves derive equal benefit from the interview. They gain something in self-respect—an inestimable advantage. They are made sensible of the tie which links the government with the governed, and feel they have a recognised place, however subordinate, in the social and political system of their country. For the time being, they are raised into the position of men to whose judgment and experience appeal is made. And when, as in the case of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's visit to his own county, the appeal is made with well-founded confidence, and is responded to with warmest approval, the conservative and cementing element which gives unity to a nation is immensely strengthened. A common sentiment, without obliterating differences of opinion, fuses all hearts into one, and contributes not a little to secure oneness of purpose, action, and endurance whenever a common danger shall appear to call it forth.

The moral influence of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's out-of-door speeches is enhanced by the unobtrusive but unmistakable indications they exhibit that he knows how to serve as well as rule. His office calls upon him to be unceasingly conversant with material arrangements and calculations in their hardest and driest shapes; but in the discharge of its duties he loses none of the reverence which is due to the supreme authority which it is man's special privilege to recognise and obey. It is impossible to be deceived by most of his utterances veiled and modest proofs of his sincere love to truth in higher forms than those with which it is his daily business to deal, or of the extent to which that love imparts life to the motives and solidity to his character. These almost unconscious gleamings forth of his inner self do nothing, certainly, to lessen the magical power of his eloquence over the minds of his countrymen, for, to the judgment and affections of the British people, as was strikingly proved in the case of his great rival Prince Consort, frankness is none the less esteemed for being allied with goodness.

There was a review in the morning of the troops composing the garrison of Madrid, consisting of nineteen battalions of infantry and twenty regiments of cavalry, with artillery and twenty-two pieces of cannon. After being reviewed in the Prado, the troops marched through the city and filed before the Queen and the Court at the palace. This fine military display was succeeded by a Royal reception, which was brilliantly attended, and which occupied the entire afternoon.

The new Ministry appear to be sure of the support of the majority. Four of them—General La Marmora, and Signors Lanza, Peruzzi, and Pepoli—are members of the Chamber of Deputies. Signor Pasquale Pepoli, one of the chief agents in the preparation of the French Convention, is the son of the late Count Gioacchino Pepoli. It is stated that the venerable and gifted Massimo D'Azeglio, one of the most eminent and brilliant champions of Italian unity, is to vote and speak for the Convention in the Chamber. D'Azeglio recommended it two years ago, that Italy should for the present make Florence her capital.

The King of Italy is said to have appointed a Commission for the prisoners taken at Aspromonte who were deserters from the army.

General La Marmora has addressed a circular to the foreign Courts explaining the intentions of the Italian Government with regard to the protocols annexed to it. The note maintains, it is stated, a firm attitude with regard to the Roman question, and declares that the Italian nation desires to be reconciled with the Papacy, it cannot ignore the principle that the people of Rome have a right to select their own form of government.

He anticipates a further addition of 2,849,000 rixdollars for the railway works of 1865-6.

AMERICA.

The arrival of the North American gives us intelligence from New York to the 10th inst. and Boston to the 11th.

The details of the battles of the 29th and 30th ult., in the neighbourhood of Richmond, have been received, and show that the fighting was of a more desperate character than was at first reported. On the 29th ult. two Federals corps, under Generals Ord and Birney, which had suddenly advanced from the south to the north bank of the James River, advanced towards Richmond, and carried the works at Chapin's Bluff and Fort Harrison Heights, but subsequently failed to take a position held by the Confederates at Laurel Hill, and withdrew to the junction of the Varina and Newmarket Roads. On the 30th ult. the Confederates unsuccessfully attempted to retake the positions captured by the Federals on the previous day. On the 1st inst. there was no fighting, though a Federal reconnaissance was pushed on towards Richmond. In these engagements the Federal correspondents put their losses to at least 2000 men; and their black regiments, which are said to have behaved very gallantly, suffered especially great losses. Active operations on the south of the James River did not commence before the 30th ult., on which day two Federal corps advanced, on the extreme left of the Federal lines, and carried some Confederate positions, but were ultimately stopped by a strong line of defences. On the 1st inst. the Federals advanced a little further, but then halted, as they found the Confederates behind earthworks which it was not prudent to assault. The Confederates still held possession over the Southside Railway and the road by which they communicate with the Weldon Railway, and therefore the position was too formidable to be easily stormed. In these actions on the south of the James River the Federal correspondents admit losses amounting to no less than 2000 men, of whom more than half were made prisoners on the 30th ult. The Federal losses in both days is admitted by Mr. Stanton to have been 4000. The Confederate losses were also severe. There seems to have been a pause in the fighting for some days. On the 7th inst. the Confederates attacked General Butler's lines on the north of the James River, and drove in the troops of General Kautz, whose guns they captured. They then attacked the position occupied by General Birney's corps, but were repulsed, and Birney retook the position which had been held by General Kautz, and forced back the Confederates "to their inner line of defence." The Federal correspondents contain a report of the larger portion of Grant's corps has recrossed from the north side of the James River, but adds that it will be immediately in the surrounding forts. Both sides were fortifying and preparing for a great struggle.

Sheridan reports himself at Harrisonburg, preparing to resume the attack on the Confederate forces, which hold fast to the Blue Ridge, in front of Charlottesville. New York papers point out that the war has a difficult task before him, but express the utmost confidence that he will accomplish it.

In Western Virginia the Federals had made an attack on Saltville and been badly repulsed.

We get a few details of the recent movements of Hood's army. His force left its position at Jonesborough, between Atlanta and Macon, on the 19th ult., under circumstances which the Confederate newspapers of Georgia to promise great success for their cause. It moved at first to Montgomery and West Point Railroad. By the beginning of October it became apparent that one of the objects of this movement was to be better able to effect the destruction of the railroad in Sherman's rear. A despatch from Chehaw, near Macon, to the Richmond papers, dated Oct. 4, stated that all accounts agreed that Hood was right in Sherman's rear, and that he was from Vining to Marietta. Sherman, it was added, would be obliged to cut his way out of Atlanta in a very few days. It soon appeared, however, that Hood had no intention of attacking his army where it could be so easily attacked, and that only a division or two had been sent to Sherman's rear. On the 6th inst. a Confederate force captured Big Shanty, upon which Sherman sent out General French with 7000 men to meet them, and on the 6th an action took place. The fight lasted all day, and the Confederates lost 200, while the Confederates left 1000 killed and wounded in their hands. The Confederates returned to Dallas. The railroad in Sherman's rear was being rapidly repaired.

The Governor of Georgia has issued a special address to have been delivered by Jefferson Davis, asserting that Sherman will be compelled to evacuate the retreat of Atlanta, that the independence of the South would be established, and the enemy defeated if half the absent troops returned to their duty. The Southern press is dissatisfied with the speech, and doubts its genuineness.

The Federal authorities in Tennessee had ordered a conscription of all men, white or black, between eighteen and forty-five years of age, and had announced that all persons in Tennessee who may vote at the ensuing presidential election on the 8th inst. or to oppose an armistice and peace negotiations with armed rebels until constitutional laws and constitutional proclamations are re-established throughout the State.

Secretary Fessenden had issued proposals for a new loan of 40,000,000 dollars, to bear six per cent interest, payable in gold. The amount of the public debt was announced on the 1st inst. at 1760 million dollars. The latest quotation of gold at New York was 99 prem.

INDIA, CHINA, AND JAPAN.

The news from India is of little interest. Sir Charles Wood, it appears, will only remain in the temporary removal of the seat of Government to Simla.

From Shanghai we learn that the Imperialists have captured Hoochow.

It was expected by the Europeans in Japan that hostilities would soon be begun by the English squadron against the Prince of Nagato, and that a passage would be forced into the inland sea.

NEW ZEALAND.

There is good reason for hoping that the surrender of the Tauranga tribes, announced in our last Number, will soon be followed by the submission of all the revolted Maoris.

AUSTRALIA.

MELBOURNE, Aug. 25.

It is probable that each and every one of the hundred and odd journals, more or less, which see the light in the five largest colonies of Australia will ring the changes in their home correspondence by this mail upon the same subject. It is not without wisdom to exaggerate, or paint entirely in bitter the state of things, and still less to represents them in a very slight manner at home as the work of a faction or the howl of a few isolated fanatics, as the unanimous resolve of a united people, there is no doubt that the repast of Earl Grey's wrath has awakened in the Australian mind a degree of angry excitement which to those who know the real attachment of the people to the Crown and British connection would appear ridiculous. The anger really is of a compound origin, arising from actual and apprehended injury of a very material character, and from sentiment, the idea, real or fictitious, of receiving unprovoked insult. The first is strong enough, and aggravated by the very peculiar nature and location of our population. Though the people in the larger towns cluster pretty closely together, in what we call the "bush," for which we have in England no adequate idea to suggest a similarity—north of the Caledonian Canal you might perhaps find tracks equally desolate—the people live as sparsely and at such a distance from anything like police that a man on leaving his hut in the morning has in general nothing to protect his wife and children but the ordinary good conduct of the people. From the horror into which London is now and again plunged through the perpetration of some real or reported crime, you can fancy what one must feel who comes from this highway-man, conviction, pervading a country nearly as large as Europe, and you may judge of the dread and disgust with which we contemplate the persistence of the English Government in forcing it upon us, though a waterless desert of hundreds of miles may lie between South Australia and Queensland or the nearest bushman. Moreover, we very well know that the old penal colonies—New South Wales to some extent, and Tasmania more perhaps—have been and improved tone in what is called decent society, compared with the three freely-founded and most progressive—Queensland, Victoria, and South Australia—in which nineteen-twentieths of the population are fresh from the old country. The reformed convict, whose dark blood is to run pure in the future regions, and whose, if he acquire any title means, leave off breaking locks and emptying pockets, but he is still a social nuisance—prickly, cringing, unmanly, and unreliable while down in the world, and the worst of bullies when up. Besides, and almost above all this, Australia feels herself insulted. We certainly have a pretty high idea of what we are, and more of what we are to be; and being at heart thoroughly proud, too, of the great country from which we sprang—to be treated by her as a rubbish-heap cuts us to the quick. What the colonists singly or united may do is not yet decided upon—further than that our Chief Secretary, Mr. M'Culloch, has announced his intention of stopping the mail service, and casting off Swan River entirely as an encumbrance. This plan savours much of cutting off the nose to spite the face. Last month I noticed the proposition of Mr. Edward Wilson. This gentleman, who has quite as much pluck as discretion, is still for going the whole hog, and quite as much pluck as discretion, is still for going the whole hog, and returning to the white shores of Albion, from time to time, cargoes of the most elaborate rascaldom. In this he was ahead of the population, till Earl Grey's discourse arrived, since which time his plan, starting at first, has been gaining favour in the estimation of the most thoughtful and staid of our citizens. Another month, however, will bring a tangible conclusion from our side; and, as to what may be done on yours, Earl Grey has only to say the word at the earliest and will assuredly repeat the fate, as he has already earned the reputation, of the Cromwells.

Parliament has been dissolved to-day by proclamation of his Excellency the Governor. The writs for the election will be issued immediately. The issued, and Mr. Murray's new Parliament will meet early in November. transportation question will be a leading feature in the programme of candidates for legislative honours—the only one on which as yet that have already been issued giving prominence to this or to its vital matter. From personal observations, there exist very flattering indications of the settlement being composed of a class superior, in education and standing, to the late assembly.

Trade, generally, is in a very healthy condition; and the returns from the gold-fields are well maintained. Within the last few weeks there appears to have been very little locking up of capital in companies. Companies that were all but defunct have been resuscitated, and, through careful and vigorous management, have been rendered profitable concerns. The same activity and care are observable in other parts of the colony. Vine, tobacco, and hemp growing is likewise receiving attention and prosecution. In the news by the last mail of the rise in the value of wool in the English market has had the effect of increasing the price of that article to the extent of from 2d. to 3d. per lb.

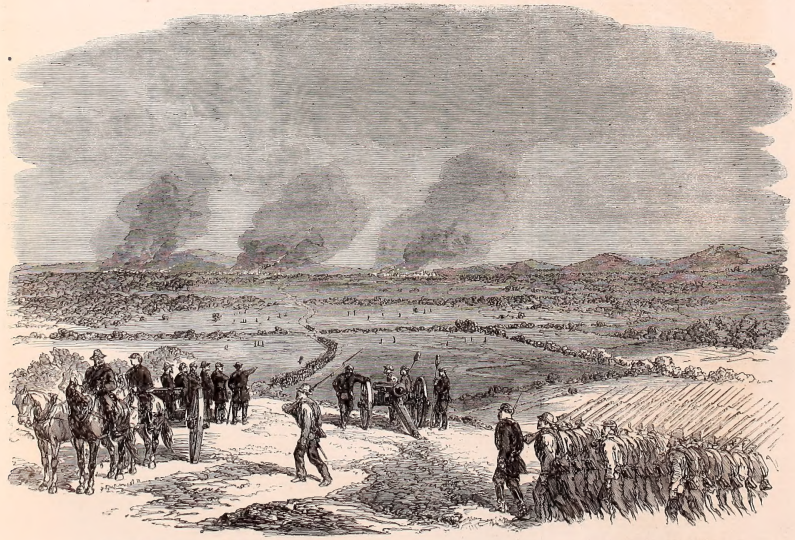
On the 3rd inst. the criminals Harrison, Woods, and Carver were executed. The first-named underwent his manner in fainting, several executed. The first-named underwent his manner in fainting, several March; the other two were concerned in the attempted bank robbery at Collingwood. Strenuous efforts were made to procure a commutation of the sentence on Harrison, on the ground of insanity. The Executive referred the matter to a medical commission, and its report being unfavourable the law was allowed to take its course. The examination of Harrison's brain after death bore out the opinion of the commission, the culprit's brain appearing to be perfectly healthy. Woods, who pled to the scaffold, declared he was not in the least afraid of death, and mounted the platform singing a profane song composed for the occasion. Carver appeared somewhat frightened, but as is customary here, was conducted, in a strictly private manner, within the precincts of the gaol.

The census of Victoria continues to thrive. Those in Tasmania are beyond anxiety, as a suitable river has been found for the latter in Victoria. Colonists, however, are not an excitable people for, it being a difficult matter at this colony to discover a suitable stream for the interesting strangers.

It has been decided to erect a new residence for his Excellency the Governor, the design for which having been selected, the work will be undertaken forthwith.

The negotiations between the Government of Victoria and that of New South Wales respecting the long-standing difficulty having terminated unsatisfactorily, the Government at Sydney are sending officers to the River Murray to survey the district on the south bank into New South Wales from Victoria.

A contract has been taken for the formation of fifteen miles of the Great Northern Railway in New South Wales.



NORTH LONDON WORKING MEN'S INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.

THE Exhibition of Works of Skill and Industry by the Working Men of North London, for which preparations have been made for some time past, was opened on Monday, in the Agricultural Hall, Islington. Earl Granville presided in the evening, and there was a large attendance of eminent persons accompanying his Lordship, and addressed the meeting. The exhibition is entirely a religious service and the singing of an ode written for the occasion, Bert Russell, who is the author of numerous of the works in the Exhibition, congratulated the London mechanics on the skill, industry, and ingenuity they had displayed, and said he was glad to see the contrivances of the blind in the Exhibition. The Exhibition is the wide difference between the handicraft of the working man's mind, and the sort of labour in which he is ordered to work. He had been told that a remarkable feature of the

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1864.

THE convict question is being involved in new complications, and it is to be hoped rather than believed that the Colonial Secretary receives the full importance of the situation. We have a right to say this, for no action that has yet been taken in the matter induces the public to think that anything but a policy of makeshifts actuates the home authorities. We have now a formal and official document, transmitted on behalf of the people of the most considerable section of Australia, by which despatch we are apprised that the colonists have resolved to isolate West Australia, where alone convicts are received; and have also intimated to England that the overland mail service shall be discontinued, unless the Peninsular and Oriental boats cease to call at St. George's Sound.

We sincerely hope that this movement on the part of the Australians will not be met by any absurd demonstration of the ordinary character of Colonial Office diplomacy. It may be that the colonists are not very polite, and that there is a sore arrogance in the mode in which their wishes are conveyed. But it must be remembered that the question has long been open; that it is regarded by the Australians almost as one of life or death, and that the home authorities have been persistent in refusing the not unreasonable demand that Australia shall cease to be the receptacle for any of the moral sewage of these islands. Something must be allowed for the irritated feelings of men who undergo a wrong; and we think that the English public will not be content to see the weak point of the colonial case fastened upon by our Government, and the wrong unredressed. It is certain that one of the clearest heads among our rising statesmen has made up his mind on the subject, and Lord Stanley may be regarded as speaking the sentiments of the great Conservative party when he declares that transportation to Australia ought to be put an end to. It is to be hoped that Government will not wait for the reassembling of Parliament before doing the act of justice which is required; but, should this dangerous delay take place, a vote finally condemning the present system will be carried, if necessary, in the teeth of the Administration. Sir Harcourt Lees rebuke the Australians in any way that may be most comforting to the dignity of the Colonial Office; but if he do not accompany his castigation with the announcement that their requisition has been acceded to he will incur a responsibility which we scarcely care to describe. Surely, a few pledges of economy might now be allowed to be the agency that shall separate the mother country from her noble Australian colonies. Such a result would be a frightful satire upon our supposed advance in the science of government.

But this crisis will have a beneficial effect if it compel the Legislature to take up in earnest, and as a whole, the great question of punishments. The fearful taxation which is now borne by the people of England in order to provide for the criminal population has been long pressing in another year; and now the system worked tolerably well. We see that the reverse is the case, and that our crowded goals are for the most part either hotels for the completed rascal or schools in which the novice is qualified for larger crime than that which sent him into the academy. Worse than this: we are not only paying a heavy price for the lodging and feeding of those with whom we can hope to do no good, but we cram our prisons with them, to the exclusion of those whom we may reasonably trust to be able to wean from vice. We clothe, lodge, and board the adult criminal, until, as he perpetually declares when in the dock, the man is one who prefers the workhouse to the gaol, and we leave in the streets and under the Dark Arches the children whom we might rescue and train up in the ways of honesty. We are year by year adding, by this suicidal system, thousands on thousands to the criminal population; and all that we do is to seize the offender, when the measure of his evil doings is nearly full, and lock him up for a term under conditions of less hardship than is borne by the honest pauper in the workhouse. One would say that it was impossible that a rational nation should tolerate such a state of things; but rational people are only too glad to leave such matters to their rulers; and their rulers have too long adopted the convenient creed that they have no right to move until the nation forces them to do so. So, between the two inert forces, a terrible army of occupation is daily evangelising in regions.

The cessation of transportation to West Australia is a great question for the colonists, but it is comparatively a small one for ourselves. The number of criminals of whom we are rid by this unjustifiable process is nothing when set beside the figures representing the crime which we keep as a vast expense at home. But the Australian demand is connected with this great question, and we hope that Parliament will not permit the authorities to separate the topics. Never was the necessity for the reconstruction of our system so pressing as now, but it will be far more pressing in another year; and our condition will become worse and worse the longer the business is neglected. The increase of severity in sentences, which was announced by Sir George Grey last Session amid general approbation, had only the value of eliciting a unanimous declaration by the prisoners that they were prepared to treat our moral sewage in a new and sterner fashion. The so-called philanthropic devices, which have worked so much cruelty to the honest and so much comfort to the culprit, have had their day, and the public will no longer be heavily taxed that accomplices may have beef tea and warm baths. It is certain that, if we could create a new penal settlement of a satisfactory nature, the people would gladly see the contents of our gaols swept thither wholesale, in order to give a chance of reform to the scarcely responsible children who are growing up in thousands in the faith that to be detected in crime is misfortune. But it appears that we can have no penal settlement of our own. The colonies will not be tainted with scoundrelism; and certain suggestions about forming penal settlements in the Hebrides, or in Iceland or Lapland, are scarcely worthy of attention. The schemes would have been laughed to scorn even when the men every way competent to discuss the subject, that for arranging with a friendly Power, which has half a continent at its disposal, for receiving in some of its outlying settlements—Siberia for instance—the felonry for which we have no place, and accepting a certain subsidy for the support of such poor as it required, or otherwise, as may be most consistent with national dignity, has found much favour with thinking men; and the very probable outcry against a novelty may easily be met if the reason of the nation approve the scheme. The enormous districts available for such a purpose, the healthiness of the climate, the distance from this country, and the complete machinery in the hands of the Russian Government combine to render the scheme acceptable. Indeed, we have little choice. We must get rid of our criminal class somehow, in order to do our duty as men and Christians to those around us; we must provide for them, and have to answer for ourselves hereafter, from being destroyed body and soul.

He enforced the excellence of the system in the usual practice of delivering a lecture on education generally, but confined himself to a close consideration of Greek tragedy. The university has a good deal of interest to others than the Greek students. Having minutely described the origin and history of the Greek plays, he concluded by remarking on the fact that, whilst of the honors in which they were performed there existed nothing but a few stones on the Pnyx, the plays and the names of the authors remained.—The result of the examinations for the entrance exhibitions at the college have been as follows:—The exhibitions of £40 and £30 are won respectively, each tenable for two years, for gentlemen attending the first lecture session at a medical school. "HOSPITALITY: THE ADMISSION OF SIR TRISTRAM TO THE FELLOWSHIP OF THE ROUND TABLE," FRESCO BY THE LATE MR. DYCE, R.A., IN THE QUEEN'S ROBING-ROOM OF THE PALACE, WESTMINSTER.

FRESCOES IN THE QUEEN'S ROBING-ROOM OF THE PALACE, WESTMINSTER.

In accordance with an intention expressed in our biographical notice of the late Mr. Dyce, R.A., we take the first favourable opportunity our space has afforded to present our readers with an Engraving and description of the largest fresco, and a review of the remainder of that great though incomplete series, in the Queen's Robing-room of the New Houses of Parliament, upon which the artist was engaged, with some interruptions, ever since 1849. During the whole of this long period Mr. Dyce would scarcely allow even his personal friends to enter the robing-room, being naturally desirous that, as the frescoes were to be mutually illustrative, they should be seen only in their associative completeness. The painter's long-deferred hope was, alas! never to be realised. A consequence of this really humble reserve, and one which is easily to be understood, was that the world almost forgot the artistic recluse, and it is not improbable that some, on hearing of his death, even required to be reminded of the subjects of his labour. Now, however, that the painter is no more, the dormant curiosity of the public is doubtless fully roused regarding these frescoes, on account of the high reputation of Mr. Dyce as one of the first, if not the first of British monumental painters; on account of the length of time spent on works executed in a chamber which it was expressly desired should contain the choicest artistic embellishments the country could produce; and on account of the novelty of the subjects chosen for illustration, and because the painter's progress was never made known.

The public will probably be admitted not long hence to see the finished frescoes; but before then, the ornamental decoratives of the room, upon which Mr. Crace is now engaged, are to be completed. We ourselves are indebted to the Right Hon. W. F. Cowper and the representatives of the deceased artist for those opportunities of making acquaintance with these works which have enabled us to offer our readers the accompanying Engraving and the first published account of the whole series.

There have been numerous misconceptions of the extent of the works in the Robing-room undertaken by Mr. Dyce, and hence it has been supposed that he failed in fulfilling his contract more seriously than the facts prove that he failed. It has, for instance, been generally reported that he undertook to paint nine frescoes, with the addition of a frieze. But the truth is, he engaged, finally, to paint only seven frescoes in compartments of the walls. Of these five are finished—the small unimportant space left unpainted in the largest fresco (to which we alluded in our biographical notice) having been filled in with its few squares of pavement by one of the artists engaged at Westminster.

The Arthurian romances were chosen to furnish the subjects of these frescoes because, in their elementary form, they are the earliest native literature of Britain; because, in their completed form, they are the most comprehensive contemporary representation of that chivalry in which, mediately, through the feudal system, so many of our historic and still-surviving institutions had their origin; and because, therefore, they are exactly suited to a Gothic national palace, and to a room devoted specially and peculiarly to the pomp and circumstance of regal and aristocratic ceremonial. The legends of King Arthur were embodied as early as the age of Nennius, who wrote in the ninth century, and they constantly received fresh accretions from various quarters, especially through the Norman trouveres, and from foreign intercourse during the Crusades. In the twelfth century the stories had, however, sunk into temporary oblivion; but the popular interest in them was again revived by Geoffrey of Monmouth's Latin compilation. The whole of that great cycle of Arthurian romance which has furnished materials to so many English poets, from Shakspeare, Spenser, and Milton down to our own Tennyson, can only, however, be said to have been completed by the publication by Caxton, in 1485, of Sir Thomas Mallory's compilation, "Le Mort d'Arthure; or, History of King Arthur and of the Knights of the Round Table." It was this compilation which Mr. Dyce took as his text-book, and he proposed to draw all his materials for costume, architecture, &c., from the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth centuries, yet to suggest the general notion of a remote and unfamiliar epoch. Each fresco he designed should exemplify one or more of the virtues most characteristic of chivalry. But in the selection of the subjects he was at the same time careful to choose such only as are given, or, at least, countenanced, by the bards. This he did in order that his representations should admit of being construed to contain whatever esoteric meaning might be found or fancied to exist in the romances themselves by students of the mythology of the bardic system. The whole design, however, of these frescoes, as literary and archæological illustrations, was, we may say, a novelty in this country; the nearest parallel to them in character, scope, and intention being the various series by German mural painters illustrative of the "Nibelungen Lied."

For the largest compartment (of the north wall) Mr. Dyce selected for subject "The Admission of Sir Tristram to the Fellowship of the Round Table" as an illustration of "Hospitality." His authority for considering hospitality as one of the special virtues of chivalry was Gerard Leghi's "Accidence of Armory" (1562), which professes to be taken from an old book entitled "Gesta Trojanorum," and in which the nine virtues of chivalry are enumerated. This great fresco is we will at once say, one of the noblest works of art an English artist has ever given to the world, and only to be compared to the great wax-glass pictures by Messrs. Herbert and Maclise, in other parts of the same palace, already reviewed in our pages. The fresco occupies a compartment on the north wall of the robing-room, measuring nine 20 ft. in breadth by 14 ft. or 15 ft. in height. It contains about thirty-five figures, the foremost of which are at least lifesize; and it occupied the artist three years to paint, irrespective of the time spent on the cartoon and coloured sketches, which, for fresco, it is absolutely necessary to prepare before commencing on the wall.

We must remind the reader that the hero of the fresco Sir Tristram, had acquired a fame as a knight-errant only second to that of Sir Lancelot du Lac himself, before his installation as Knight of the Round Table, and that his long-delayed admission into the order was only after fighting a drawn battle with Sir Lancelot, and both knights mutually discovered themselves; that he was prevented by his noble adversary to allow himself to be conducted to King Arthur's Court. The scene of the "Admission" is the great hall of King Arthur's palace at Camelot. The hall consists of a series of arcades with apertures composed of coupled Norman arches. The exact moment chosen for the picture is when the King, amidst general exclamations of "Welcome!" holds aloft his famous sword Excalibur to strike Sir Tristram with the flat of the blade on the right shoulder, and thus dub him Knight of the Round Table. The great King stands on a dais in his royal robes, his handsome, fair-haired head surmounted with the golden crown of state glittering with gems. With one hand holding the great magic sword high in the air, and pointing with the other to the mystic round table, he glances enthusiastically towards the assembled Court, knights, ladies, and spectators of all degrees. Sir Tristram, standing on the edge of the dais, inclines before the King, looks reverently towards the round table, and appears both humble as if appreciating his unworthiness. He is clad in chain-mail hood or coif and hauberk, the latter covered with a surcoat; and accoutred with belts, from which hang sword and dagger; while round his hood is a bandeau of gold set with jewels, which, according to Merlin, was in the shape as well as a mystic symbol, of the great rounded Table of the King." The round table, which, according to Malory, Arthur's father, Uther Pendragon, had instituted as a rendezvous for his knights of the world, and to number three-and-sixty, was the best knights of the world, and to number three-and-sixty, each, which was instituted by Uther Pendragon, Arthur's father, to assemble the best

"HOSPITALITY: THE ADMISSION OF SIR TRISTRAM TO THE FELLOWSHIP OF THE ROUND TABLE," FRESCO BY THE LATE MR. DYCE, R.A., IN THE QUEEN'S ROBING-ROOM OF THE PALACE, WESTMINSTER.

The public will probably be admitted not long hence to see the finished frescoes; but before then, the ornamental decorations of the room, upon which Mr. Cope is now engaged, are to be completed. We ourselves are indebted to the Right Hon. W. F. Cowper and the representatives of the deceased artist for those opportunities of making acquaintance with these works which have enabled us to offer our readers the accompanying Engraving and the first published account of the whole series.

There have been numerous misconceptions of the extent of the works in the Robing-room undertaken by Mr. Dyce, and hence it has been supposed that he failed in fulfilling his contract more seriously than the facts prove that he failed. It has, for instance, been generally reported that he undertook to paint nine frescoes, with the addition of a frieze. But the truth is, he engaged, finally, to paint only seven frescoes in compartments of the walls. Of these five are finished—the small unimportant space left unpainted in the largest fresco (to which we allude in our biographical notice) having been filled in with the few squares of parchment by one of the artists employed at Westminster.

The Arthurian romances were chosen to furnish the subjects of these frescoes because, in their elementary form, they are the earliest native literature of Britain; because, in their completed form, they are the most comprehensive contemporary representation of that chivalry in which, mediately, through the feudal system, so many of the manners and other conservative institutions had their origin; and because, therefore, they are exactly suited to a Gothic national palace, and to a room devoted specially and peculiarly to the pomp and circumstance of regal and aristocratic ceremonial. The legends of King Arthur were embodied as early as the age of Nennius, who wrote in the ninth century, and they constantly received fresh accretions from various quarters, especially through the Norman trouveurs, and from foreign intercourse during the Crusades. In the twelfth century the stories had, however, sunk into temporary oblivion; but the popular interest in them was again revived by Geoffrey of Monmouth's Latin compilation. The whole of that great cycle of Arthurian romance which has furnished materials to so many English poets, from Shakespeare, Spenser, and Milton down to our own Tennyson, can only, however, be said to have been completed by the publication by Caxton, in 1485, of Sir Thomas Mallory's compilation, "La Mort d'Arthure; or, History of King Arthur and of the Knights of the Round Table." It was this compilation which Mr. Dyce took as his text-book, and he proposed to draw all his materials for costume, architecture, &c., from the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth centuries, yet to suggest the general notion of a remote and unfamiliar epoch. Each fresco he designed should exemplify one or more of the virtues most characteristic of chivalry. But in the selection of the subjects he was at the same time careful to choose such only as are given, or, at least, countenanced, by the bards. This he did in order that his representations should admit of being construed to contain whatever esoteric meaning might be found or fancied to exist in the romances themselves by students of the mythology of the bardic system. The whole design, however, of these frescoes, as literary and archæological illustrations, was, we may say, a novelty in this country; the nearest parallel to them in character, scope, and intention being the various series by German mural painters illustrative of the "Nibelungen Lied."

For the largest compartment (of the north wall) Mr. Dyce selected for subject "The Admission of Sir Tristram to the Fellowship of the Round Table" as an illustration of "Hospitality." His authority for considering hospitality as one of the special virtues of chivalry was Gerard Leghi's "Accidence of Armory" (1562), which professes to be taken from an old book entitled "Gesta Trojanorum," and in which the nine virtues of chivalry are enumerated. This great fresco is, we will at once say, one of the noblest works of art an English artist has ever given to the world, and only to be compared to the great water-glass pictures by Messrs. Herbert and Maclise, in other parts of the same palace, already reviewed in our pages. The fresco occupies a compartment on the north wall of the robing-room, measuring some 30 ft. in breadth by 14 ft. or 15 ft. in height. It contains about thirty-five figures, the foremost of which are at least lifesize; and it occupied the artist three years to paint, irrespective of the time spent on the cartoon and coloured sketches, which, for fresco, it is absolutely necessary to prepare before commencing on the wall.

We must remind the reader that the hero of the fresco, Sir Tristram, had acquired a fame as a knight-errant only second to that of Sir Lancelot du Lac himself, before his installation as Knight of the Round Table, and that his long-delayed admission into the order is one of the most memorable events of the Arthurian romances. It was only after fighting a drawn battle with Sir Lancelot, and both knights had mutually discovered themselves, that he was persuaded by his noble adversary to allow himself to be conducted to King Arthur's Court. The scene of the "Admission" is the great hall of King Arthur's palace at Camelot. The hall consists of a series of arcades with apertures composed of coupled Norman arches. The exact moment chosen for the picture is when the King, amidst general exclamations of "Welcome!" holds aloft his famous sword Excalibur to strike Sir Tristram with the flat of the blade on the right shoulder, and thus dub him Knight of the Round Table. The great King stands on a dais in his royal robes, his handsome, fair-haired head surmounted with the golden crown of state glittering with gems. With one hand holding the great magic sword high in the air, and, pointing with the other to the mystic round table, he glances enthusiastically towards the knight, who, approaching with uncovered head, inclines before the King. Tristram, standing on the steps of the dais, inclines before the King, looks reverently towards the round table, and spreads forth his hands as if deprecating his unworthiness. He is clad in chain-mail hood or coif and hauberk, the latter covered with a surcoat; and accoutred with belts, from which hang sword and dagger; while round his head is a bandlet of gold set with precious stones, distinguishing him as the son of a "king." The round table, which, according to Merlin, was in the shape, as well as a mystic symbol, of the great rounded plane of the earth, which was instituted by Uther Pendragon, Arthur's father, to assemble the best knights of the world, and to number three who should "achieve the St. Greal" (of which more in another place), is placed to the extreme right, behind the King. It is represented as a glazed to the extreme right, behind the King. It is represented as a somewhat small but massive object of Purbeck marble, with carvings of very early character. On it is a plate of apples, probably an allusion to the "Fortunate Island," or Island of Apples, the mediæval garden of the Hesperides. Around the memorable emblem of this knightly brotherhood to which it gave its name are the principal officers of King Arthur's Court and household—Sir Kay, the King's foster-brother, and Steward or Seneschal, on the near side; and on the further side old Sir Ulfius, the Chamberlain; Sir Lucas, the Butler; and Sir Bawdewine, of Britain, Constable. This group is completed by a young knight with a coronet over his salade. This is probably Modred, who passed for the son of King Lot, and who was afterwards the traitor that caused the destruction of the King and his great order of knights. In front of Sir Kay is a wild, wizard-like figure, which might well be taken for that of Merlin. If, however, we accept the very confused chronology of the story, the great magician would at the period represented have been dead some time, a victim to the wiles of the fairy Vivians. The wreath of oak-leaves and harp proclaim this, however, to be at all events a bard, and therefore still a most important personage in connection with the earlier days of the late date as the fourteenth and even the fifteenth century, is one of those thousand anachronisms of the romances with which the painter is not, of course, chargeable. By the side of the bard stand two boy acolytes, in white vestments, chanting.

The ladies of the Court, knights, and civilian spectators are grouped in the body of the hall, before the dais. Nearest Sir Tristram, with one hand uplifted in token of "welcome," is the fair and frail Queen Guinevere, in flowing robes and glittering diadem. Behind her are

We are year by oldal system, thousands on thousands until all that we do is to seize the ure of his evil doings is nearly full, erm under conditions of less hardship than is borne by the honest pauper in the workhouse. One would say that it was impossible that a rational nation should tolerate such a state of things; but rational people are only too glad to leave such matters to their rulers; and their rulers have too long adopted the convenient creed that they have no right to move until the nation forces them to do so. So, between the two inert forces, a terrible army of occupation is daily evangelising its legions.

The cessation of transportation to West Australia is a great question for the colonists, but it is comparatively a small one for ourselves. The number of criminals of whom we are rid by this unjustifiable process is nothing when set beside the figures representing the crime which we keep at a vast expense at home. But the Australian demand is connected with this great question, and we hope that Parliament will not permit the authorities to separate the topics. Never was the necessity for the reconstruction of our system so pressing as now, but it will be far more difficult in another year; and our condition will become worse and worse the longer the business is neglected. The increase of severity in sentences, which was announced by Sir George Grey last Session amid general approbation, has only the value of affording a unanimous declaration by the people that they were prepared to treat the moral sewage in a new and sterner fashion. The so-called philanthropic devices, which have worked so much cruelty to the honest and so much comfort to the culprit, have had their day. The public will no longer be heavily taxed that scoundrels may have beef tea and warm baths. It is evident that, if we could create a new penal settlement of a satisfactory nature, the people would gladly see the contents of our gaols swept thither wholesale, in order to give a chance of reform to the second generation of criminals now growing up in thousands in the faith that to be detected is the great misfortune. But it appears that we can have no penal settlement of our own. The colonies will not be tainted with scoundrelism; and certain suggestions about forming penal settlements in the Hebrides, or in Ireland, are the merest dreams of insanity of classification. The scheme which has been for some time under consideration by men every way competent to discuss the subject, that for arranging with a friendly Power, which has half a continent at its disposal, for receiving in some of its outlying settlements—Siberia for instance—the criminals of whom we no place, is the only one with a certain subsidy for the support of such penal settlements, or otherwise, as may be most consistent with national dignity, has found much favour with thinking men; and the very probable outcry against a novelty may easily be met if the reason of the nation approve the scheme. The common districts available for such a purpose, the healthiness of the climate, the distance from this country, and the complete machinery in the hands of the Russian Government combine to render the scheme acceptable. Indeed, we have little choice. We must get rid of our criminal classes somehow, in order to save the men and women Christians to the young, whom we must prevent, as we shall have to answer for ourselves hereafter, from being destroyed body and soul.

The subject was one of much interest to others than the Greek students. Having minutely described the origin and history of the Greek plays, he concluded by remarking that he had, whilst of the honour in which they were performed there existed nothing but a few stones on the Athenian hill-side, and the names of the authors remained.—The result of the examinations for the entrance exhibitions at this college has been declared. "HOSPITALITY: THE ADMISSION OF SIR TRISTRAM TO THE FELLOWSHIP OF THE ROUND TABLE," FRESCO BY THE LATE MR. DYCE, R.A., IN THE QUEEN'S ROBING-ROOM OF THE PALACE, WESTMINSTER.

FRESCOES IN THE QUEEN'S ROBING-ROOM OF THE PALACE, WESTMINSTER.

In accordance with an intention expressed in our biographical notice of the late Mr. Dyce, R.A., we take the first favourable opportunity our space has afforded to present our readers with an Engraving and description of the largest fresco, and a review of the remainder of that great though incomplete series, in the Queen's Robing-room of the New Houses of Parliament, upon which this artist was engaged, with some interruptions, ever since 1848. During the whole of this long period Mr. Dyce would scarcely allow even his personal friends to enter the robing-room, being naturally desirous that, as the frescoes were to be mutually illustrative, they should be seen only in their associative completeness. The painter's long-deferred hope was, alas! never to be realised. A consequence of this really humble reserve, and one which is easily to be understood, was that the world almost forgot the artistic recluse, and it is not improbable that some, on hearing of his death, even required to be reminded of the subjects of his labour. Now, however, that the painter is no more, the dormant curiosity of the public is doubtless fully roused regarding these frescoes, on account of the high reputation of Mr. Dyce as one of the first, if not the first of British monumental painters; on account of the length of time spent on works executed in a chamber which it was expressly desired should contain the choicest artistic embellishments the country could produce; and on account of the novelty of the subjects chosen for illustration, and because the painter's progress was never made known.

The public will probably be admitted not long hence to see the finished frescoes; but before then, the ornamental decorations of the room, upon which Mr. Crace is now engaged, are to be completed. We ourselves are indebted to the Right Hon. W. F. Cowper and the representatives of the deceased artist for those opportunities of making acquaintance with these works which have enabled us to offer our readers the accompanying Engraving and the first published account of the whole series.

There have been numerous misconceptions of the extent of the works in the Robing-room undertaken by Mr. Dyce, and hence it has been supposed that he failed in fulfilling his contract more seriously than the facts prove that he failed. It has, for instance, been generally reported that he undertook to paint nine frescoes, with the addition of a frieze. But the truth is, he engaged, finally, to paint only seven frescoes in compartments of the walls. Of these five are finished—the small unimportant space left unpainted in the largest fresco (to which we alluded in our biographical notice) having been filled in with its few squares of pavement by one of the artists engaged at Westminster.

The Arthurian romances were chosen to furnish the subjects of these frescoes because, in their elementary form, they are the earliest native literature of Britain; because, in their completed form, they are the most comprehensive contemporary representation of that chivalry in which, mediately, through the feudal system, so many of our historic and still-surviving institutions had their origin; and because, therefore, they are exactly suited to a Gothic national palace, and to a room devoted specially and peculiarly to the pomp and circumstance of regal and aristocratic ceremonial. The legends of King Arthur were embodied as early as the age of Nennius, who wrote in the ninth century, and they constantly received fresh accretions from various quarters, especially through the Norman trouveurs, and from foreign intercourse during the Crusades. In the twelfth century the stories had, however, sunk into temporary oblivion; but the popular interest in them was again revived by Geoffrey of Monmouth's Latin compilation. The whole of that great cycle of Arthurian romance which has furnished materials to so many English poets, from Shakespeare, Spenser, and Milton down to our own Tennyson, can only, however, be said to have been completed by the publication by Caxton, in 1485, of Sir Thomas Malory's compilation, "La Mort d'Arthure; or, History of King Arthur and of the Knights of the Round Table." It was this compilation which Mr. Dyce took as his text-book, and he proposed to draw all his materials for costume, architecture, &c., from the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth centuries, yet to suggest the general notion of a remote and unfamiliar epoch. Each fresco he designed should exemplify one or more of the virtues most characteristic of chivalry. But in the selection of the subjects he was at the same time careful to choose such only as are given, or, at least, countenanced, by the bards. This he did in order that his representations should admit of being conveyed to contain whatever esoteric meaning might be found or fancied to exist in the romances themselves by students of the mythology of the bardic system. The whole design, however, of these frescoes, as literary and archæological illustrations, was, we may say, a novelty in this country; the nearest parallel to them in character, scope, and intention being the various series by German mural painters illustrative of the "Nibelungen Lied."

For the largest compartment (of the north wall) Mr. Dyce selected for subject "The Admission of Sir Tristram to the Fellowship of the Round Table," as an illustration of "Hospitality." His authority for considering hospitality as one of the special virtues of chivalry was Gerard Leigh's "Accidence of Armory" (1562), which professes to be taken from an old book entitled "Gesta Trojanorum," and in which the nine virtues of chivalry are enumerated. This great fresco is, we will at once say, one of the noblest works of art an English artist has ever given to the world, and only to be compared to the great waterglass pictures by Messrs. Herbert and Maclise, in other parts of the same palace, already reviewed in our pages. The fresco occupies a compartment on the north wall of the robing-room, measuring some 30 ft. in breadth by 14 ft. or 15 ft. in height. It contains about thirty-five figures, the foremost of which are at least lifesize; and it occupied the artist three years to paint, irrespective of the time spent on the cartoon and coloured sketches, which, for fresco, it is absolutely necessary to prepare before commencing on the wall.

We must remind the reader that the hero of the fresco, Sir Tristram, had acquired a fame as a knight-errant only second to that of Sir Lancelot du Lac himself, before his installation as Knight of the Round Table, and that his long-delayed admission into the order is one of the most memorable events of the Arthurian romances. It was only after fighting a drawn battle with Sir Lancelot, and both knights had mutually discovered themselves, that he was persuaded by his noble adversary to allow himself to be conducted to King Arthur's Court. The scene of the "Admission" is the great hall of King Arthur's palace at Camelot. The hall consists of a series of arcades with apertures composed of coupled Norman arches. The exact moment chosen for the picture is when the King, amidst general exclamations of "Welcome!" holds aloft his famous sword Excalibur to strike Sir Tristram with the flat of the blade on the right shoulder, and thus dub him Knight of the Round Table. The great King stands on a dais in his royal robes, his handsome, fair-haired head surmounted with the golden crown of state glittering with gems. With one hand holding the great magic sword high in the air, and, pointing with the other to the mystic round table, he glances enthusiastically towards the assembled Court, knights, ladies, and spectators of all degrees. Sir Tristram, standing on the steps of the dais, inclines before the King, looks reverently towards the round table, and spreads forth his hands as if deprecating his unworthiness. He is clad in chain-mail hood or coif and hauberk, the latter covered with a surcoat; and accoutred with belts, from which hang sword and dagger; while round his hood is a bandlet of gold set with precious stones, distinguishing him as the son of a "king." The round table, which, according to Merlin, was in the shape, as well as a mystic symbol, of the great rounded plane of the earth, which was instituted by Uther Pendragon, Arthur's father, to assemble the best knights of the world, and to number those who should "achieve the Sangreal" (of which more in another place), is placed to the extreme right, behind the King. It is represented as a somewhat small but massive object of Purbeck marble, with carvings of very early character. On it is a plate of apples, probably an allusion to the "Fortunate Island," or Island of Apples, the mediæval garden of the Hesperides. Around the memorable emblem of the knightly brotherhood is ranged the seats of the principal knights, which it gave its name as the principal officers of King Arthur's Court and household—Sir Kay, the King's foster-brother, and Steward or Seneschal, on the near side; and on the further side old Sir Ulfius, the Chamberlain; Sir Lucas, the Butler; and Sir Bawdewine, of Britain, Constable. This group is completed by a young knight with a coronet over his salade. This is probably Modred, who passed for the son of King Lot, and who was afterwards the traitor that caused the destruction of the King and his great order of knights. In front of Sir Kay in a wild, wizard-like figure, which might well be taken for that of Merlin. If, however, we accept the very confused chronology of the story, the great magician would at the period represented have been dead some time, a victim to the wiles of the fairy Viviana. The wreath of oak-leaves looks reverently towards the round table, and spreads forth his hands as if deprecating his unworthiness. three or four of her attendant damsels. All these are pretty; but one fair girl in a blue surcoat has a beauty so radiant as almost to throw that of the Queen into the shade. Beyond this group stand a few other spectators, who take more or less interest in what is going on.

To the left, a space, nearly half that of the entire fresco, is occupied with knights, mounted and on foot, and attendant pages. The large size of this group is, by-the-way, somewhat detrimental to the balance of the composition. Most conspicuous of the mounted knights, by dignity of treatment as well as by prominence of position, is Sir Lancelot, in brass corslet and golden-cornered salade, and mounted on one of his favourite white chargers, richly caparisoned with embroidered bridle-reins and poitrail. With one hand held aloft, in loyalty leads the almost universal acclamations. Beyond him, raising their horses, are Sir Gawaine and his brother Sir Gahariz, while having left the Court vowing to bring back Sir Tristram, and not that wretched knight's wife, as Sir Lancelot, Near them, and also mounted, are Sir Bleoberis and, probably, Sir Bors, Lancelot's kinsman. We need hardly say that Sir Bors has had plenty of authority for representing these knights as having formed part of the hall. The cotion was preserved down to our own day in the ceremony of the "Champion of England" (hereditary in the Dymoke family) riding into Westminster Hall at the coronation of George IV.

To the extreme left of the foreground are four standing figures conversing. Here the vice of envy and other bad passions assigned to evil-doers knights in the old romances, and which the painter has perhaps hinted at in a few other figures, seem distinctly enough. The figure which first catches the eye is Sir Dagonet, King Arthur's fool, in motley hose, hooded cape, cap and bells, carrying his bauble. He is evidently bantering his listeners; and one of these, a knight in a long mantle, with his head bandaged, is the only one who, by covertly pointing with a gesture of disparagement in the direction of Sir Tristram, whose back another knight, unarmed, turns upon him with surprise and anger at his malice. The knight with the bandaged head might have been intended for Sir Palamedes, had not Sir Tristram's old enemy and rival been at the time in prison. Near him, however, we conclude this to be the always evil-disposed Sir Agravaine. A fourth figure, of very evil expression, is plainly intended for one of the converted "Saracens" (as, for instance, Sir Persaunt of Inde, or Sir Sagramore), who are pretended to have sought the famous fellowship of King Arthur's knights, from mere motives of love of the world.

The fresco next in size to the large painting we have engraved occupies the principal compartment of the west wall. Its subject is derived from the romance of the Saint Greal. This strange legendary fiction is of great antiquity, and doubtless originally mainly employed as a vehicle for barbic mysteries. We have, however, only to do with its later meaning in the "Morte d'Arthure," in which it is used in a tolerably intelligent religious allegory, intended to show the importance of pursuing spiritual objects, and not merely chivalric renown. We need, therefore, only remind the reader that, according to the later romance (which appears to be derived from the apocryphal gospel of Nicodemus), the St. Greal is the holy vessel in which Joseph of Arimathie caught the blood and gave of the wine to his disciples at the Last Supper, and which is said to have been afterwards used by our Lord Himself to collect the blood which flowed from the wounds of the Saviour. This vessel, it was further pretended, had been, after many miraculous adventures, brought into some unknown place in Britain, and the "quest" or search for it was the grand spiritual and final object of the institution of the Round Table and its humbler offspring, the Knighthood of the Imperial head King Arthur. The title of this fresco is "The Vision of Sir Galahad and his Company;" and it is intended to represent the "Vision" or "Faith." The adventure represented is one of many which occur to the same party in their quest of the St. Greal. The three "virgin" or "maiden" knights, Sir Galahad, Sir Percevel, and Sir Bors, of the virgin estate of Sir Perceval, are, at the "secrets" of mass in a hermitage chapel, a vision of Christ surrounded by the Evangelists. In the text the Evangelists appear under the form of their symbolical beasts or creatures; but, in the Apocalypse, as in Raphael's "Vision of Ezekiel," but Mr. Dyce has chosen to follow the Evangelists as well as their attendant symbols. In the centre of the composition, and in the midst of a large aperture, is their appearance as the Christ throne which is supported over the low Norman altar of the hermitage chapel by rolling volumes of cloud. Above, in the sky, is the cross and stretches forth his wounded hands. Behind, and extending round the back of the throne, there is a large disc-shaped golden nimbus, which has a very fine effect against the azure sky; and, besides, secures a centre of interest for the admirable monumental symmetry and balance of the whole design. Higher, to the spectator's right and left, and likewise sustained in mid-air by clouds, are the Evangelists, with their symbols, St. Matthew and St. Luke, with a small head of an "angel" and a winged ox; and to the right St. John and St. Mark, with an eagle and a winged lion.

In the lower half of the picture are the three knights, Sir Perceval's sister, the heroic Lady Blanche, kneeling before the supernatural choice while gazing with awe at the heavenly vision, and reverent, with head reverentially bowed, bearing a censer. The youthful Sir Galahad is represented as the knight, fitting his harness ready towards the beatific manifestation of our Lord. This action is very significant, and perfectly appropriate to the character of the youthful son of Sir Lancelot du Lac is described as the most saintly of all knights, as endued by ancient prophecy to "achieve" the Holy Greal, and as having been actually translated to heaven when his quest was ended. He wears a sword and scabbard—the same, of course, which miraculously descended to him through the hall and he holds with one hand the no less miraculous white shield with the red cross made thereon by "that good knight," Joseph of Arimathie, with his own blood. His companions on the other hand are awe-stricken, and remain even when the vision hasten upon them. Sir Perceval stands to the right centre, looking upwards in a transport of joy and supplication; his chaisely-beautiful sister as she swoons with rapture. Sir Bors stands considerably further to the left, and also with his spirit—his circumstance and the expression of overmastering awe in his upturned head seeming to indicate the commencement of that "one stain from fleshly lust,"—imagined though not indulged—upon an otherwise spotless life.

We propose to reserve a few critical remarks which apply generally to this series of frescoes till after we have offered a description of the three smaller works; but we must take the present opportunity to say that this great fresco, upon which the artist was engaged two years actually painting on the wall, is a truly grand and supporting his chastely-beautiful sister as she swoons with rapture. In conception, in general technical excellence, in the adaptation of the masses of the composition to the recruse with the surrounding architecture, and in the rich yet mellow magnificence of the colouring, this fresco is, we think, the finest of the series—finer even than the larger and far more elaborate fresco we have engraved—though the subject of the latter is calculated to be of more general interest. But all five of these frescoes by Mr. Dyce—though less original than the great water-glass picture by Mr. Herbert, in the Peers' Robing-room—Chantrey or Apps-like—deserve exhibition as a gigantic power displayed by a true Watteau stereochrome picture by Mr. Maclise in the Royal Gallery, and, especially in view of the growing taste for wall-paintings, scarcely less valuable, inasmuch as they are precisely those examples of the application of the principles of the great mural painters of Italy and Germany which we should select as the most unexceptionable models for the student, and as affording the safest standards of comparison for the public. We hope to describe the three smaller frescoes in an early Number.

The Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, the Duke of Cambridge, went to Portsmouth, on Monday, to witness a series of combined military and naval operations, under the superintendence of Major-General Lord William Paulet, representing an attack by an enemy from seaward, a landing and seizure of a part of the coast line, and a subsequent attack upon the town of Portsmouth, and its defence by its garrison. The whole of the troops engaged afterwards marched past his Royal Highness, and then, forming in line, in contiguous columns, with Major-General Lord W. Paulet and staff, saluted the Queen and colours to the front, advanced in slow time, halted, and lowered their colours in compliment to a Royal salute, passed the saluting position on Tuesday the Duke, accompanied by Lord William Paulet and Staff, visited the works on Portsdown-hill; and on Wednesday, the western defences of the port.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

The Davenport Brothers are still a topic of conversation, both in private party and in club. It is useless to deny that people still halt between two opinions, and even those who have seen them several times are puzzled. On Tuesday evening a very noisy party of about seventy-five gentlemen connected with the press, one or two ladies, and the brothers and their attendants, met in the small room in Hanover-square to witness the phenomena. The usual invitation was printed, and contained a notice which did not elucidate the matter. It is for very clear English it states that the Davenports experiment in "Peter-natural Philosophy" (!), and that "the phenomena occurring in their presence have been differently ascribed, by some to spiritual agency, by others to legerdemain. Some attribute to them a power analogous to mesmeric influence resident in the human body, the nature of which is unknown, and others to electricity, the significance of the means employed and of the source of the power they possess." The name is signed by Mr. Fenton, Manager of the Davenport Brothers. "O!" instead of "for" is significant, is it, of course, nothing more than an error.

The hand and feet of the latter were ropes abraded the wrists of one of the brothers: tied by two gentlemen—Mr. Charles Reade and J. Hollingshead, but above suspicion—behind him in a cabinet: very simply constructed; tied with their hands behind their backs, but not pinioned, and with a little to disappointment of his brethren of the press, each of which is a sine qua non—the two brothers sat in front of the untied them, rang bells, played a disconcerted concert on tambourines, fiddles, guitars, &c., and pushed their hands from an aperture in the cabinet. The whole was finished in half an hour. Now then, what is your theory? The spirits were again invoked, again solution of the mystery. The spirits were again invoked, again solution of the mystery. The spirits were angry, and did nothing.

Let us state simply what is in favour of these young men and what is against; for the thing that many hundred people personally could assemble to see useless miracles worked is certainly extraordinary. In the first place, we believe that it is fair to say that no conclusion has been arrived at. These first friends—Messrs. Palmer, Fergusson, and Fay—were candid, and expressed themselves as puzzled. There was no perceptible trickery in rope, cabinet, or chair. The cabinet stands on short legs set in glasses, and apparently isolated from manipulation. Colonel Fraser, the Sheriff of the county and a new adherent of Mr. Charles Reade sat in the darkness shut in with the Davenports, and was touched by the spirits. Mr. Reade sat on one of the faithful remained. The spirits were again invoked, again solution of the mystery. The spirits were angry, and did nothing.

The new Germanian Hospital at Dalston was formally opened by the Duke of Cambridge on Saturday. The building has been erected from the designs of Professor Donaldson, and is architecturally as beautiful as it is commodious and well adapted for its purpose. The opening ceremony was simple, and passed off with perfect success.

At a Civil Court of Sewers, on Tuesday, a report was read from the committee who had been empowered to report on the desirableness of constructing a sluice at the junction of Lots-pit-hill and Fleet-street. The committee strongly approved of the project and recommended its immediate carrying out. After some discussion, this report was adopted by the Court.

The British Museum received on Wednesday the statues from the Farnese Palace, at Rome, recently purchased from his Majesty the ex-King of Naples. These statues are now in course of repair. They form part of the celebrated Farnese Collection, the remainder of which is now in the Museo Borbonico, at Naples, and consist of those which were found in the Baths of Caracalla.

The first stone of that portion of the Thames Embankment comprised in the second contract was laid on Wednesday, in the presence of a large number of the members, of the Board of Works and their staff, by Mr. Bazalgette, the engineer-in-chief, on the Thames bank, immediately at the new line of Arundel-street, Strand. The work at this point is situated at the contract extends from the eastern side of Waterloo Bridge to the lower end of the Temple Gardens, a length of 1,000 feet.

Last week the births of 2072 children—1020 boys and 1052 girls—were registered in London. In the corresponding weeks of the years 1854-63, the average number was 1,759. The increase in the births in London rose to 1353 last week. In the forty-first week of ten years, 1854-63, the number of deaths was, on an average, 1,107, which, if a correction for increase of population, becomes 1185. There were ten fatal cases of smallpox, forty-seven of measles, seventeen of scarlatina, six of simple fever, eight of diarrhœa, twenty-two of whooping-cough, eighty-three of typhus, and thirty-three of diarrhœa. Whilst diarrhœa has not been more than usually prevalent, it has shown a tendency to increase. Last week the deaths from the latter disease were 33, but from typhus rose to eighty-three.

An iron-clad frigate, built for the Spanish Government by the Messrs. Thomas, of Peslar, was launched on Monday. The vessel is to be named the Arapiles (after that range of hills where the Duke of Wellington gained the victories known in our histories as the Battle of Salamanca). The French call it the Battle of Arapiles), was originally designed for a wood vessel; but as she afterwards altered and cut down to an iron-clad, the vessel was named by Mdme. Conyer, the wife of the Spanish Minister to our Court, who was attended by a large number of the attachés of the embassy, a large number of Spanish ladies and gentlemen. The Arapiles will mount thirty-four guns. Her principal dimensions are:—Length between perpendiculars, 279 ft.; extreme breadth, 54 ft.; depth in hold, 22 ft.; and her burden will be 3,242 tons. She will be worked by engines of 800 horse-power nominal horse-power.

We wonder some harbour trials of these new life-boats, to be stationed on the Lincolnshire coast, took place in the Regent's Canal Dock, Limehouse. The boats (built by Messrs. Forrestt and Son, of Limehouse) are all of the same size, being—keel, 30 ft.; length over all, 34 ft.; rowing eight oars, double banked. They are made of cedar planking on oak frames, copper fastened. The boat just shipped was self-acted, through patent valves, with twenty-five gallons of water in her bottom, and when put out of the dock was rowed to the National Life-boat Institution by twenty-four persons. The National Life-boat Institution has already received from the Messrs. Forrestt the Robert Raikes, of Gloucester, and the Benjamin Franklin, of Boston, the Duchess of Northumberland, of Tynemouth, and the Theodore Hook, of Poplar, all of which have been launched, and the Theodore Hook, of Poplar, has called forth the admiration of the Duchess of Northumberland and other influential boathouses have been erected for the life-boats.

An order for the winding-up of the Leeds Banking Company, under Mr. Turquand as official liquidator, was made by Vice-Chancellor Kindersley on Thursday last.

A case was tried in the Sheriffs' Court on Thursday week, before Mr. Under-Sheriff Pitt-Taylor and a jury, wherein Mr. Phillips, the proprietor of the Britannia-st, sued to recover £8 16s., the value of a ring, of some work done to it and repairs to the gas-pendant, and 16s. 6d. for interest. The ring was of diamond and opal cue, had been supplied in 1861 to the defendant, Mr. Walrond, who was then in the habit of visiting the new public house in a state of intoxication. Mr. Bedsel Walrond, the defendant's father, was subpœned, and stated that his son was of unsound mind so far as regarded his habits, and had been so for some time past. He had allowed the defendant £300 a year. On the 9th of November, 1861, his son was twenty-one years of age. An endeavour was made to prove that a ring, under the circumstances of the defendant, was a necessary, legally speaking; but the Under-Sheriff ruled that it was not, and that the jury were not the plaintiff. The defendant (who expects considerable property) declared he was not aware that a gentleman could be put in debt for what he came into his fortune.

Some time since Mr. Russell Daunt, a stockjobber, was brought before the Lord Mayor on a charge of having threatened to shoot a gentleman in the street of another thousand pounds. He was brought up again on Wednesday, when one of the parties came forward to say that he was not aware that the charge was made by him was a mistake. Another customer was not quite satisfied, but the accounts were completed, and the defendant discharged from custody. He was then brought on the charge. The Lord Mayor therefore discharged the prisoner from custody.

At Bow-street Police Court, on Wednesday, a statement was made to the magistrate by a policeman in reference to a gentleman who had called at the inquiring into a complaint made by a lady residing in Hertfordshire against the proprietors of an engraving establishment in Oxford-street. The lady had answered an advertisement offering employment to ladies on conditions that they showed as a specimen as samples of their ability to work a piece of lace which she could obtain did not yield more than a shilling in earnings. She failed to get any work, and consequently lost money and considered herself. The magistrate said he was afraid that the lady could only find a remedy in the county court.

At the Greenwich Police Court, on Wednesday, a young woman, calling herself Mary Burnell, was brought up, charged with stealing money. She had gone to the establishment of Miss Harvey, who keeps a school for young ladies at Blackheath, and represented herself as the niece of Mr. Burnell, M.P. She had also letters, professedly from respectable people, requesting that she might be received as a pupil by Miss Harvey. She was accordingly put under a remained for some time, receiving education. No time was wasted by her. She contrived to watches and jewels from the bedrooms of the other pupils. She afterwards turned out, robbed Miss Harvey extensively. At last, on pretence of going to see a friend in Bath, she got away, and then her depredations were discovered. Search was made for her, and she was arrested in Dublin. She was remanded for further examination.

An inquest was held on Wednesday, by Dr. Lankester, on the body of Mr. William Hall, a manager of the Metropolitan and Exchange Bank, when the evidence was given to the effect that death had been caused by cyanide of potassium, and the jury returned a verdict of "Suicide during temporary insanity."

CONSPIRACIES IN RUSSIA.—A St. Petersburg letter, in the Botschafter of Vienna, says:—"Events are assuming a more and more afflicting appearance in this country. The Poles incorporated among the Russian troops cantoned in the provinces bordering on the Volga are said to have formed a plot in conjunction with a secret society of Russian called 'Nihilists.' The intention attributed to them is to turn all the villages and towns of the provinces. Accidents and the energy of the authorities have saved Saratow and Samara, but the town of Simbirsk and all the villages around have fallen a prey to the flames. The correspondence of the Ministry of Justice and of the Minister of the Interior, the correspondence of the Governors of Kasan and Simbirsk, and the minutes of the Commission of Inquiry, have been sent to the Emperor of Russia, but also been spread. The burning Asiatic Cholera, which reduced 40,000 inhabitants to misery and deprived them of shelter. These disasters are not to be wholly attributed to the Poles; the incendiaries are, above all, due to the peasants, who are employing this means of avenging themselves on their masters. The social fermentation is extreme in Russia, and is extending. The reports sent to St. Petersburg are fearful, and mention considerable disasters at Moscow, Orel, Kaluga, Kostroma, and Pskoff. The loss is immense. At Narwa two of the guilty parties were seized in the fact of lighting the fires. They were not Poles, but Russians, named Pskoff and Klukkoroff, and formed part of a secret revolutionary society. The crowd threw the men into the flames which they had themselves lighted up. Secret societies are being everywhere organised in the empire. The root of Russian Republic, founded by Count Mennoseff, already includes a large number of adherents, and the 'Public Welfare' Society still more formidable."

The Emperor and Empress of Russia arrived at Lyons at eight o'clock on Wednesday night and proceeded on their journey to Nice on the following day, passing by Marseilles. Their Majesties were expected.

The health of the Earl of Carlisle has been gradually improving. His medical attendants report his Lordship as able to sit and converse a little.

The reported loss of her Majesty's ship Bulldog is, we are glad to be able to state, entirely unfounded. The commander-in-chief at the Admiralty and private letters show that the vessel was safe at Jamaica on the 22nd of September.

The New Zealand Examiner states that instructions have been sent to the War Office by the mail of the 22nd of the reports which have been engaged in the New Zealand war. The termination of hostilities will enable the troops to return at once.

Apples are so abundant this year in the department of the Meurthe, France, especially in the neighbourhood of Sarrebourg, that they are selling at the rate of 1 franc 50 centimes (1s.) the sack, containing about 60 lbs. the hectolitre (2¾ English bushels).

SOME IDEA of the enormous amount of smoking in the world may be formed from the facts that one of the Brazilian mail-packets recently received 1,000,000 cigars, and that the cargo of the steamship Alabama which left Southampton last week landed before her departure 2000 bales of unmanufactured tobacco. The Alabama is usually full of cigars when she returns to Bremen, and without landing it there brought it to Southampton, whence it was sent in bond to the port of the Confederate States.

The regulations under which letters addressed to officers serving on board any of her Majesty's ships on a colonial station may be forwarded at the public expense, through the British packet of the 14th, after the 1st of November next, be so far modified that such reduced rate will be chargeable only when the letters are sent by the packet of the 14th, and when such letters are posted unpaid they will be chargeable on delivery with a fine of 6d. in addition to the postage due thereon. Letters insufficiently paid (by means of postage stamps), they will be chargeable on delivery with a fine of 1s., in addition to the deficient postage. The same regulations will apply equally to letters from officers serving on board her Majesty's ships in the colonies when addressed to this country.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

SOMEWHAT lessened pressure for loans of Bank notes for short periods for money, the market for Home Securities has shown rather more firmness this week; but, in all other descriptions of stocks, the tendency has been in favour of buyers, and the closing prices of the week show a decline of from 1/8 to 1/4 per cent.

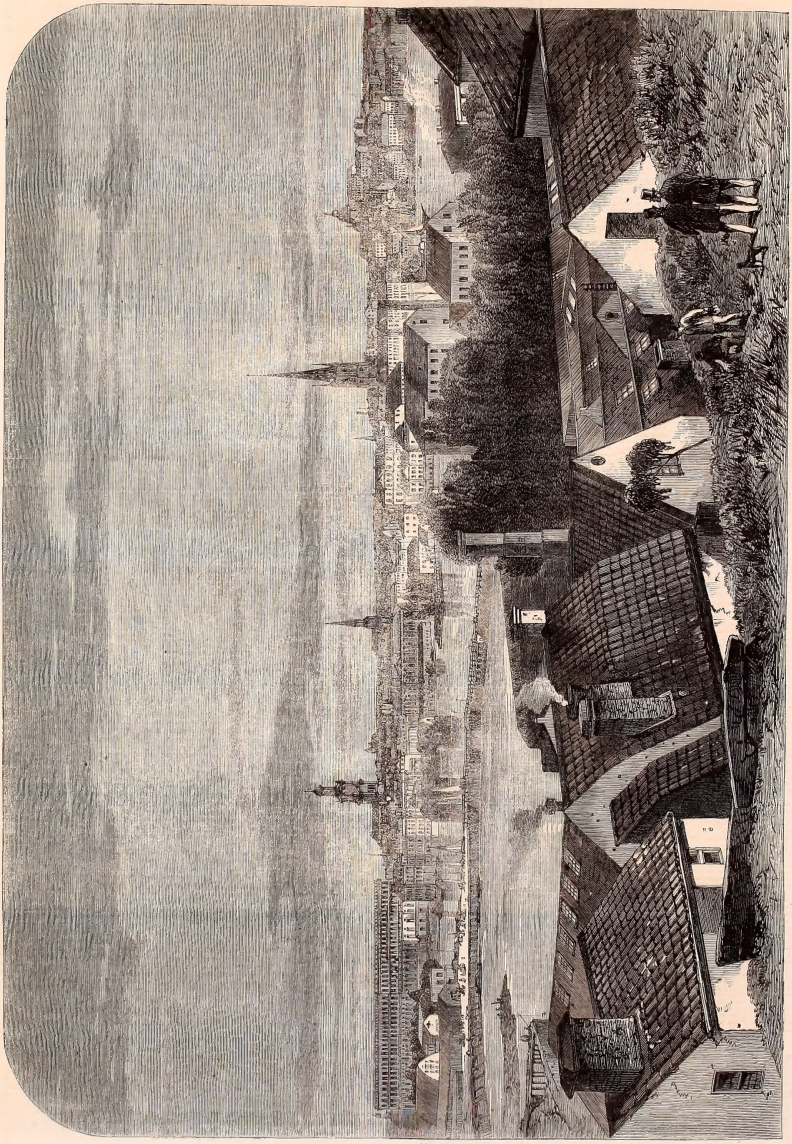
There has been a steady inquiry for accommodation at the Bank of England, at very full rates, for the last fortnight; but, generally speaking, the demand has not been extensive, and the rates for the best commercial paper

Three months' bills	6 per cent.	Four months' bills	6½ per cent.
Sixty days' bills	6 „	Six months' bills	7 „
Ninety days' bills	6½ „

The Bank of England loses £66 per cent. Four months' bills 6½ per cent.

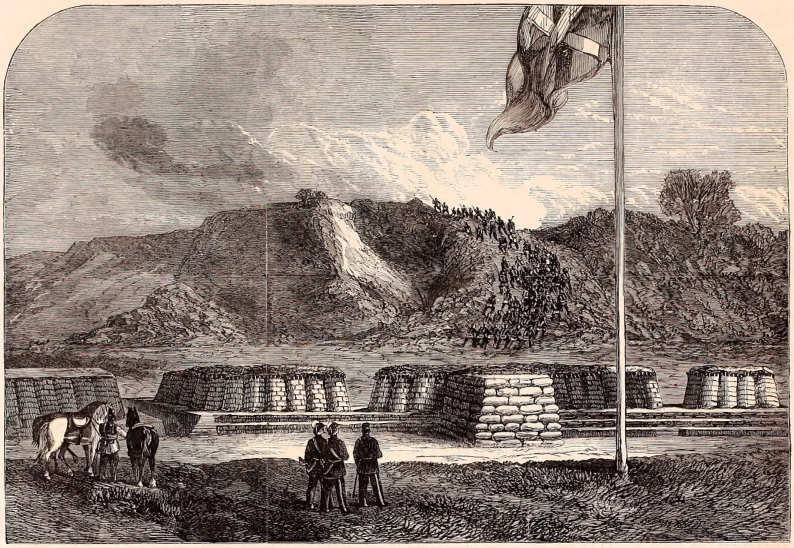
Throughout the Continent money commands extreme quotations, with a good demand. The rates in the leading cities are:—

	Bank rate	Open market		Bank rate.	Open market.
	per cent.	per cent.	Amsterdam	4	4
Paris	3	3	Hamburg	6	6
Vienna	7	8	Brussels	6	6
Berlin	7	8	Frankfort	6	6
Frankfort	6	6	St. Petersburg	8	10



The announcement that three weeks the Bank of France has purchased £2,000,000 in specie. This gives a total increase in the bullion of the Bank of France, during the last month, of £4,000,000. The French Government has produced an issue of bullion on the Paris Bourse.

About £300,000 in specie has been sent into the Bank of England, and the demand for export appears to be very limited. The silver has been purchased by Dutch houses, at 60¾d. per ounce, standard, for delivery in the course of next month.



The Stock Exchange has been very dull, and the closing quotations for the leading Securities, at a decline of 1 per cent on previous rates. All the dealers were accepting "for the account" of the 4th of November. Consols for money, sold at 90¼, to leave the account at £2 per share from the insurance fund.

Considerable fluctuations in the Funds would have been announced. Letters from Rio Janeiro, dated the 30th ult., announce the complete suppression of the revolt, and the leading banks had stopped payment.

HEAL and SON have observed for some time that a large proportion of purchasers in their ironmongery department have to visit a much larger selection of Bed-room Furniture than is usually displayed in such a department, in order to choose from the different descriptions of furniture it is necessary that each description should be seen in connection with the others, and they have therefore added to their extensive stock, by which they can select not only to extend their show of Iron, Brass and Wood Bedsteads, but also to include Bedding and Bed-room Furniture, which has been attempted, but also to provide several small rooms for the purpose of keeping complete Bed-room Furniture in the different woods.
Japanned Dual Goods may be seen in complete suits of five or six pieces, consisting of Chest of Drawers, Washstand, Towel-horse, Pedestal Cupboard, Suites of Stained Deal Cottage Furniture, Polished Pine Chests of Drawers, Washstands, Towel-horses, Pedestal Cupboards, and also a set of Pine Furniture in ivory, which is very suitable for bed-rooms. A Suite of very superior Cottage Oak Furniture will generally be kept in stock, and any article of it may be obtained separately, in various woods, will be added.
The Bedsteads, which are made by Heals in large numbers, as also a complete assortment of Bedding of every description, for every climate pattern necessitated, as it would appear on the Bedstead.
A Priced List of Bedsteads (and the best extant) post-paid is placed on the bedsteads.
Heal and Son's Bedding Goods for the better Bed-rooms, and for Servants' Bed-rooms, are kept ready-made, in every good texture. The entire stock is arranged in right rooms, six galleries (each 100 ft. long), and five floors, at 196, Tottenham-court-road. Purchasers can see an assortment of Bed-room Furniture as they think can possibly be required.
Heal and Son's new Illustrated Catalogue of Bedsteads, Bedding, and their have just united large workshops on the premises for this purpose, where workmen are employed on the best and most economical plan.
Their Bedding trade receives their constant and personal attention, and is under the superintendence of a lady.
They particularly call attention to their Patent Spring Mattress, which is woven without seam, and is very pure and wholesome, and is lower in price than the old spring mattress.

OPENING OF THE PEOPLE'S PARK, FARNWORTH, LANCASHIRE.

In our last week's Paper we reported the formal opening of the People's Park, presented by Mr. Thomas Barnes, M.P., to the people of Farnworth, near Bolton. The presence of the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave much additional importance to this ceremony, but even without a speech from Mr. Gladstone it would have been a highly interesting occasion. Mr. Barnes, a native of Bolton, and the owner of one of the largest establishments for cotton spinning in that neighbourhood, has conferred upon the township of Farnworth a very noble gift, by devoting to public uses an estate of eleven acres, worth at least £12,000 or £13,000. He announced this munificent purpose four years ago, at an entertainment given to his workpeople to celebrate the coming of age of his eldest son. The Birch Hall estate, which he had then recently made part of his own property, is situated at Farnworth township, adjoining the high road from Manchester to Bolton, and bounded on one side by a canal and on the other side by the factory people in his employ. The ground has been really open to the public for three years past, and a band of music has played there once a week; but the donor has now, in accordance with proper form, the formal dedication of the park was deferred until it could be accepted by a local board for the district, formed under the Public Health Act, in the course of last year. In the mean time, Mr. Barnes has employed a landscape-gardener, Mr. Henderson, of Birkenhead, to lay out the ground and to construct it with terraces, lakes, fountains, and bowers. The proceedings on Wednesday week drew many thousands of visitors to Farnworth from Manchester, Bolton, and the other great manufacturing towns within a few miles of the place. The streets were decorated with flags, triumphal arches, evergreens, and flowers. Along the wall of the new park, on the side of Wellington-street, were erected a number of poles, with banners suspended to them, and long strips of calico, bearing inscriptions, stretched from one pole to pole. The entrances from Dixon-green and Queen-street were ornamented with triumphal arches, one of them with flags and the ringing of the church bells and firing of cannon heralded the festive business of the day. All the children of the different Sunday-schools were assembled by their teachers in the Dixon-green to join the procession, which included the members of the trade societies, friendly societies, and other popular bodies, led by some of the chief local borough magistrates, the Mayor and Corporation of Bolton, the Local Board and parish officers of Farnworth, and a party of gentlemen, with Mr. Barnes, Mr. Gladstone, and the ladies of their families, to open the park in due form. Two companies of the 27th and 53rd Lancashire Rifle Volunteers, with their band, and some of the Worsley troop of volunteer cavalry, formed the military escort. The chairman of the Local Board of Health, Mr. Alfred Barnes, presided on the platform, and received from his uncle, Mr. Thomas Barnes, M.P., the gift of the park. Mr. Gladstone then addressed the meeting in a very pleasant and instructive speech. This is the noblest chosen by our Artist for the illustration of the scene we have engraved. The other incidents of the day in previous wore there assembled. The Sunday-school children, aided by a select choir, sang the Hundredth Psalm and the National Anthem; the workpeople fired a salute; the Chancellor of the Exchequer cheered Mr. Barnes and for Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone. These proceedings were followed by a dinner of roast beef, plum-pudding, and a glass of strong ale upon the terrace. Mr. Gladstone's health was drunk, and he again spoke in considerable length. Mr. Barnes's health (Sentlemen's club at High Sheriff of the county this year); Mr. Henry Ashworth, Mr. John Cheetham, and other well-known Lancashire men, were also among the toasts. A display of fireworks and some home illuminations closed their festivities at Farnworth.

A congress of mathematicians from almost all the States of Europe met in Berlin, on the 19th inst., to make arrangements for re-measuring degrees of longitude in Central Europe.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Post states that it is the fashion in the French capital for ladies with brown or black hair to have their heads adorned with a light wreath, and more especially those who are about to make ladies more beautiful. Masses of hair, ever augmenting in size, do not seem to be Nature's favourite gift to the fair sex, whatever they may wish to maliciously enough; they are now about the circumference of a soup plate, and, as before, are padded out with false hair and artificial curls, generally improved in texture, occasionally studded with diamonds, and seldom left entirely without a wreath or flowers. Such is the present style of coiffure and other ornaments.

Intelligence from Batavia announces that the Dutch are engaged in a war with the natives of Java, and that the fortress of Singtang, which was only garrisoned by a handful of men, was surrounded by hosts surrounded by hosts of enemies, and could not be held much longer. Besides the troops, the officers who defended the fortress had women and children in their families. The Lieutenant-Colonel in command was making an heroic resistance, and until that ill would be put to a cruel death rather than fall into the hands of their foe. Every day the garrison was being diminished by the fire from the enemy. Assistance was sent for, and it was earnestly hoped that aid would arrive in time to prevent the massacre. One steam-vessel, which had received some damage in the action, had left the harbour of Singtang, had been captured in the River Melawie by the Borneans and Javanese, and then driven back after setting fire to the town. At Pontianak (Celebes) the natives had revolted because they were compelled to work on a road, and had been shot in the attempt to escape from their employment. At Banjoemas the natives had killed four Javanese serving under the Dutch flag, and had offered battle to the Government on the 6th of August, and, after killing two other persons, an attack was made on Djenpeanie; but it was repulsed, and many of the natives were killed. An attempt was made against another quarter, but soon afterwards the chiefs of the insurrectionists made their submission under promise of pardon.

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR'S EPITAPH.—(To the Editor.)—I take the liberty of forwarding to you a copy of the epitaph on my father, which appeared, together with the inscription on the tablet to which appeared, together with the inscription on the tablet to which it refers, in the Number of your paper being intended to Mr. Landor in the year 1863, when he was resident in Bath; and during one of our conversations he repeated to me the following lines:—

I cannot lie beneath a marble, nor any stone,
Lest I should fall, after Nature, Adam, and Eve,
I scarred both hands and feet, and my side,
It sinks, and I am ready to depart.

These lines, I will remember, he had set at the end of his own epitaph; and on my remarking that for so renowned a classical scholar as himself no other tongue should be employed, he immediately left the room, requested me to send him a Latin version of the above lines, which thus stood in full as I have now copied them. Whether this was ever sent I am indeed without the first line, "I strove with none," &c., I cannot say; but as Mr. Landor completed the verse with the above words, I think it may interest those who are curious in these matters.—R. REECE, jun., B.A., Balliol College, Oxford.

THE ROYAL FAMILY OF SPAIN.—The Madrid correspondent of the Daily News writes:—"The Queen of Spain is now a large, portly woman, perhaps somewhat older in appearance than she really is, and very stout, though no longer 'a lovely girl,' to suit by no means unattractive. The Princess Isabella has attained the age when young ladies begin to think of their parties. She has about her a great deal more sparkle, vivacity, and of her parties. She has about her a great deal more sparkle, vivacity, and of her personal beauty enough to make her a belle in any society in the world. She has a smaller share of the latter than of the former qualities, but she has enough of it to be very large share of the affections of those who are entitled to speak for her. She is the idol of the people, and especially mother of her children. She has now four of them—three girls and a boy. The eldest, Isabella Isabella, was born on the 10th of October, 1851. She is an interesting-looking young lady, and is said to have inherited her mother's disposition. She does their queen her entirely approve. The Prince of the Asturias is the next child, and is but yet quite a child. He is a pleasant but rather cooking boy, who seems to be worn out with state and study. The poor little fellow is driven through Madrid every day in a coach and six, escorted by a guard of honour, almost every afternoon, to the Retiro (a part of his park reserved for the Royal Family), where he has always to appear and show himself about in a little goat-chaise. He is generally accompanied by his sister, the Infanta Isabella. She, too, has her children, who have their queues but

CURRENT LITERATURE.

The Married Life of Anne of Austria. By M. W. Freer. (2 vols. Tinsley.) The year of our Lord 1624 was popularly known as "l'année des magnificences," in consequence of the splendid festivities which followed the betrothal (on the 18th of March) of Louis Treize with the Infanta Marie Anne Maurice, daughter of Philip III., King of Spain. Why a daughter of a King of Spain should be dubbed "of Austria" is a question answered by the fact that her mother was Marguerite of Austria; and therefore she would be known to history as Anne, and not Maria, is to be explained (to compare great personages with small) on the principle which prevails at the present day in well-regulated families, whereby a household dridge, whose name is Mary, must be content to be known by any other name than that if there be already a Mary belonging to the family. And Marie de' Medici, the mother of Louis Treize, as she had no mind of her own to allow any confusion to exist as to the individuality of herself and of her daughter-in-law. So Marie Anne Mauriciette, Infanta of Spain, became Queen Consort in France, is known to us henceforth as Anne of Austria. Her marriage with Louis Treize was solemnised in 1615, when she was just fifteen years of age and he was a year younger; on the 5th day of May, 1643, she was left a widow. Her eventful life during the intervening years is the subject with which the gossip-poet of Miss Freer's two interesting volumes is occupied. Miss Freer has acquitted herself of her task in an unusually happy manner, and has supplied no mean addition to what has already been written about the unfortunate, if not wholly unblamable, Anne of Austria. One is never tired of reading of the lively, amorphous, warm-blooded Anne, of the sombre, suspicious, cold-blooded spouse; of the audacious love of the magnificent Buckingham; of the misery which fell upon the young Queen's life from her "coming event" of Richelieu's greatness; and of the scandal which attributed to the mighty Cardinal the paternity of Louis who was called Le Grand. "Dieu seul et moi" Richelieu is said to have said the orator at the grave of the fourteenth Louis; and certainly the perusal of Miss Freer's book does not incline one to look for compunction amongst the great ones of the world. The married life of Anne of Austria is a record of vanity, intrigue, frivolity, and meanness; and on more favourable circumstances not a single gleam shines or present the miseries inseparable from civil war, which call forth the cheers or the tears of the multitude, and which fell upon the young wife with idols to adore or to blaspheme, may be learned from the incidents connected with the birth of Louis Quatorze. In some respects the career of Austria after her widowhood, after the star of Mazarin had reached its zenith, may be the most interesting part of her history; but the portion which ends with the "Dieu seul et moi" for "le" historical study" will be found neither stale nor unprofitable. Nevertheless, the concluding chapter of Miss Freer's two volumes will be read with probably greater zest, as they refer to the pitiful story of a loyal personage whose fate, if it were not more romantic, is undoubtedly more unknown to the generality of readers than that of Anne of Austria. Abbonio L. founder of the Portugoos monarchy, had declared "that God had vouchsafed more intimations than a King of the Royal lineage of Avis should never fall the realm; nevertheless, that great tribulation and unparalleled misery should befall the Monarch descended in descent from himself." The sixteenth was Don Sebastian, son of Donna Joana (the youngest daughter of the Emperor Charles) and Don Juan of Portugal. Don Sebastian was born on the King Joao III. Don Sebastian's early dreams of a crusade against the infidels of Barbary and his pitiful unfaithful addiction to the counsel and lence in all martial exercises; his indifference to and bashfulness before women; his unfortunate expedition to Africa, and his mysterious fate are described in a manner which will repay the reader. Whether the ill-starred King were slain in war against the infidel or hanged by a stronger foe than the Moslem Sultan, is a point not decided by Miss Freer, but she presents us with an historical episode of which the interest is increased rather than diminished by mystery wherein the fate of the principal person connected with it is enveloped; and we heartily recommend it as an improvement upon fiction.

Bee-keeping. By the Rev. John Bligh. (4 vols. Bosworth, Low, Son, and Marston.) Although this book appears pseudonymously it would be a mistake to suppose that its contents are received by the Entomological Society with roars of laughter, and a general impression is abroad that Mr. Bligh is not more humorous in his sketches when he discourses of the bee than he is when he deals with the "to be." The subject is a pleasant one, and the author has come to the decision to entomologists, seeing that our own knowledge of bees is confined chiefly to their business habits and moral character as they are described by the late Dr. Watts, even before the days of Virgilius Maro, who attributes to "Ceropian bees an inborn love of getting," and to the pungency of their satire, which applied to the drone of a chubby boy; for they certainly do sting, if boyish recollections may be trusted, whatever Dr. Cumming and others may say to the contrary notwithstanding. Still, it may be readily granted that a boy is not a fair instance. A boy is of himself sufficient provocation. It is a question whether Mr. Bligh's opening Ku adversing "bee-keeping under the rose" and a creature which will not sting a boy must be either sluggish or impecunious. He maintains, however, that, if Dr. Cumming has, as we understand him to say he has, been a bee-master for fifteen years, so acquisitive and retentive a mind as his, aided by his keen powers of observation, must have gathered together a stock of facts which are likely to be valuable, and which his practised pen enables him to put together in a striking and readable form, so as it appears to us that, what with gleanings from undoubted authorities upon bee-keeping, what with his own remarks, what with his letters to the Times, and his quotations from the letters of correspondents, and what with the illustrations which stud his letterpress, he has wrought a very entertaining and instructive, though by no means infallible, work upon the subject of bee-keeping. His letters and his quotations from the letters of correspondents are sometimes as full as abusive, are highly amusing. It seems to us, however, that Dr. Cumming is open to the sarcasm, "physician, heal thyself," and that when he writes controversially he would do well to remember the advice he gives to one of his correspondents to "mix a little honey with his ink." And eat a little of it himself, as well. Mr. Bligh has a little honey, and not a little ink-and-honey, is to be eaten at breakfast by a boy beginning it not quite early enough. Young entomologists is to be taken to the mongrel word "bee-cide:" we say homicide or manslaughter; and we should, therefore, say apicide or beeslaughter. Dr. Cumming writes more than once for apicide, and it is a pity he did not hold by it. "Bee-cide" is a vile word, and smacks unpleasantly of insecticide.

The Deaf and Dumb. By the Rev. Samuel Smith. (William Mackintosh.) The author thinks that a notice of this little brochure is likely to promote the cause of the unfortunate deaf-mute, and it is, therefore, both a pleasure and a duty to draw attention to it. The author deals with a perfect knowledge of and an earnest interest in his subject; he has himself been engaged in teaching the speechless, and he has filled the office of Chaplain of the London Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb. His pamphlet is full of information, intelligently put; but we cannot, with a strong opinion, agree with the ignorance which he supposes to prevail, and the misprehension which he imagines to "exist in the public mind" with respect to the deaf-mute. If, however, we are wrong, let the ignorant no longer plead ignorance, but obtain and read Mr. Smith's brochure.

English Grammar. By John Ashby. (Vol. II. of Chapman and Hall.) A reprint from a work published in 1852. It is the conception of a shrewd head and an earnest heart, and its republication is due to the fact that it is supposed to "have a special bearing on the present relation of England to the European nations." It is not easy to see the "special bearing," but it contains views which are never out of time; it prescribes, in fact, "practical Christianity" as the remedy for whatever is "rotten in the state of England. The prescription is a good one; the difficulty is to get it made up, and to get the preparation, when made up, taken regularly.

The Molyneux Family. By Julia Addison. (Vol. V. Marlborough and Co.) A tale for children, its object is to show "how to do good," and we gather from it that the problem is solved by being good, for he that is good does good by example, if by no other means. "The Molyneux Family" however, are in affluent circumstances, and, besides setting a moral example, can afford to give away twenty-pound notes—a fact which causes events to go along smoothly and remove the gloom from scenes of misery. The story is nicely enough written, and is generally true to nature, except when instant punishment overtakes wrong-doing. Of course, a little boy who will eat too much tart is likely to be ill; but it is contrary to our experience that you catch cold whenever you go out against orders, or that you break your arm, when though you set off to break your neck, wherever you are like a thrush for raspberries into forbidden paths. Indeed, the reader must make up his mind to feel very much as if he were at Sunday-school, going his catechism.

Love-Scenes. By the Author of "The Gambler's Wife." (2 vols. Sampson Low, Son, and Marston.) Every admirer of Mr. Vincent Crummles—that is to say, everybody—has heard of "my noble, my lion-hearted friend," Nina Lyndia, as the lady of the Theatre Royal, Gweudoline Lawson is said to be lion-hearted, and is supposed to number her friends. Nina Lyndia, as Mr. Vincent Crummles' friend, may fail to discover many symptoms of the lion's heart, and you may consider the grandiloquence a failure; but the intention of the novelist is clear. Nina Lyndia is very unfortunate in her friends, particularly the clergyman, and also of his long-suffering, neglected wife; but it is only a reader of the most perverse type who will not be satisfied either by the general run of characters or by the ingenuity of the plot. Moreover, some of the descriptive passages will be specially to the fair and faithful lingers. Her acting of this part is perhaps the finest in the world. It is impossible to conceive anything more subtle in conception or more refined in execution. On the boards of the national theatre we ought to see those well-practised artistes who are most capable of giving life to dramatic characters, and the public will welcome with peculiar favour the return of a lady to the London stage who in all her impersonations regards and realises the ideal of character. The Posthumus of Miss Heath was a performance against which no many spare criticism on the performance. We were much pleased with Mr. Creswick's Jachimo, and particularly with Mr. Marston's Belarius, which was really magnificently acted.

We have to record the production of a new comedy-farce at the St. James's, entitled "Woodcock's Little Game." Mr. M. Morton has in this little piece proved his experience with a new situation, the leading part of which exactly suits Mr. C. Mathews. Marmaduke Woodcock, an elderly bachelor, has married a pretty girl, chiefly with her to live in seclusion, when he discovers that his mother-in-law has planned for her daughter a bridal tour to the metropolis. When there, the newly-married old man finds to his horror that they are disposed to enter into all the gaieties of the beau monde—full of dangers as they are said to a husband on the eve of a party with a young wife. He determines to frighten them into the country again. He pretends, therefore, to have been engaged in a duel the night before, as an fashionable world, and wears his arm, which he declares to have been wounded, in a sling. Marmaduke Woodcock's little game succeeds. The bridal party return to Cumberland, and Mr. Woodcock secures the repose that he had coveted.

Mr. Arthur Boughton has given to the boards of the New Royalty a pleasant piece of double entendre, which may possess a fashionable audience. The title is somewhat startling—"The Demon Lover." However it is the nephew of a Chinese sage, addicted to magic; and, having recently returned from school at Wittenberg, he appears as Mephistopheles, and is the chief contriver of the complications of the piece, which is tolerable, and obtains from him his signature to a marriage contract with his ward. The vain old man is made to believe by his flattering domestics that he is young and handsome, but they look to it if he attempts to marry the lady in question. He therefore answers her only to his nephew, though he is mightily enraged when he finds that he has been duped.

Manchester has been noted during some years past for the high character of its musical entertainments, conspicuous among which have been the soirées of the Concert Hall and the liberally supported Free Trade Hall concerts. To these has been added in addition to the two old-established local theatres—the Theatre Royal and the Royal Queen's—a third, named the Prince's Theatre, has just been erected by a limited liability company on the site of the old Saturday evening. The new theatre, which is in Oxford-street, has an ornate Italian façade in stucco. Its auditorium is open in 1480 square yards, and is calculated to seat 1500 persons, there being, above the pit, first a dress circle, and then an upper circle rising and receding in such further back as to accommodate "the gods" in the upper portion. The internal decorations are almost lavish in their elegance, both in front of the galleries and on the ceiling and ceiling. The act-drop is a beautiful work of art, by the eminent scenic painter Mr. W. Beverley, and would deserve separate notice on its own merits. Great attention has been paid in the construction of the theatre to the personal comfort of the audience, both as regards ventilation, easy and commodious seats, provision for the exit of fire, and shelter for large numbers at its entrance on rainy nights. The architect is Mr. Solomons. An opening address, written for the occasion by Mr. H. M. Acton, was read by Mr. Calvert. The dresses were of the richest description, and the scenery, by Mr. Grieve, of Covent Garden, and Mr. Holding, of Manchester, was superb. The opening night was a brilliant success.

GOUNOD'S "SAPHO."—(To the Editor.)—In your impression of the 8th inst. there is a paragraph in your musical column respecting a supposed revival of M. Gounod's "Sapho" in an amended shape. It further states that it was produced before "Faust," and had little success. It is perfectly true that it had small success at the first production, but it followed "Faust" by three years, and is a later work. "Faust" was first performed, at Paris, in 1859, and "La Reine de Saba" in 1862, and not see the light till February, 1862. Owing to the weakness of the story, the opera did not make a great success at the time, and the composer was the most important tableau in the whole opera—that representing the Queen of the Queen Sheba, on which her entire success depended—was omitted. Many some of the most brilliant and characteristic music written by the gifted composer of "Faust"—was a fatal blow to the success of the piece. It remained for Brussels and Darmstadt, where the opera is always performed in its complete state, to do it justice; and I am convinced that whenever the day shall come that the music of "La Reine de Saba" shall be performed in this country, to whatever store it may be wedded, it will be received with the admiration due to the grandest and noblest music yet given to the world by M. Gounod. We all know the excellence of the music of "Faust" and of "Mireille;" I can only assure the public that the music of "La Reine de Saba" (I say nothing of the story) is ten times better than either; and I have no hesitation in declaring it to be Gounod's finest work by very many degrees. The instrumentation, too, is even more marvellous than that of "Faust." To cite a single instance amongst many, I need only mention the wonderfully beautiful septuor closing the second act, in which the magnificence and originality of treatment of the orchestral accompaniment is astonishing.—I.

THE THEATRES.

The legitimate drama at Drury Lane is in a thriving state, and the pledges made by the management to the public are duly carried out. On Monday last Mr. Fawcett made his reappearance as Imogen in Shakspeare's exquisite play of "Cymbeline." This drama is one of the finest examples of Shakspeare's genius, and realises what is the most difficult thing of all to produce in dramatic composition—the relief of perspective. The poet has adopted a large canvas, and introduced into it a wonderful variety of figures, events, and scenes. The action travels from Britain to Italy and back again; its course is multitude of accidental adventures; but all these at last meet in the solution of the plot, which is wound up with a skill which only Shakspeare of all dramatists has exhibited. Mr. Fawcett has the management in the manner in which this exquisite play is mounted, and particularly on the fact of their having produced Miss Heath in the representative of the fair and faithful Imogen. Her acting of this part is perhaps the finest in the world. It is impossible to conceive anything more subtle in conception or more refined in execution. On the boards of the national theatre we ought to see those well-practised artistes who are most capable of giving life to dramatic characters, and the public will welcome with peculiar favour the return of a lady to the London stage who in all her impersonations regards and realises the ideal of character. The Posthumus of Miss Heath was a performance against which no many spare criticism on the performance. We were much pleased with Mr. Creswick's Jachimo, and particularly with Mr. Marston's Belarius, which was really magnificently acted.

We have to record the production of a new comedy-farce at the St. James's, entitled "Woodcock's Little Game." Mr. M. Morton has in this little piece proved his experience with a new situation, the leading part of which exactly suits Mr. C. Mathews. Marmaduke Woodcock, an elderly bachelor, has married a pretty girl, chiefly with her to live in seclusion, when he discovers that his mother-in-law has planned for her daughter a bridal tour to the metropolis. When there, the newly-married old man finds to his horror that they are disposed to enter into all the gaieties of the beau monde—full of dangers as they are said to a husband on the eve of a party with a young wife. He determines to frighten them into the country again. He pretends, therefore, to have been engaged in a duel the night before, as an fashionable world, and wears his arm, which he declares to have been wounded, in a sling. Marmaduke Woodcock's little game succeeds. The bridal party return to Cumberland, and Mr. Woodcock secures the repose that he had coveted.

Mr. Arthur Boughton has given to the boards of the New Royalty a pleasant piece of double entendre, which may possess a fashionable audience. The title is somewhat startling—"The Demon Lover." However it is the nephew of a Chinese sage, addicted to magic; and, having recently returned from school at Wittenberg, he appears as Mephistopheles, and is the chief contriver of the complications of the piece, which is tolerable, and obtains from him his signature to a marriage contract with his ward. The vain old man is made to believe by his flattering domestics that he is young and handsome, but they look to it if he attempts to marry the lady in question. He therefore answers her only to his nephew, though he is mightily enraged when he finds that he has been duped.

Manchester has been noted during some years past for the high character of its musical entertainments, conspicuous among which have been the soirées of the Concert Hall and the liberally supported Free Trade Hall concerts. To these has been added in addition to the two old-established local theatres—the Theatre Royal and the Royal Queen's—a third, named the Prince's Theatre, has just been erected by a limited liability company on the site of the old Saturday evening. The new theatre, which is in Oxford-street, has an ornate Italian façade in stucco. Its auditorium is open in 1480 square yards, and is calculated to seat 1500 persons, there being, above the pit, first a dress circle, and then an upper circle rising and receding in such further back as to accommodate "the gods" in the upper portion. The internal decorations are almost lavish in their elegance, both in front of the galleries and on the ceiling and ceiling. The act-drop is a beautiful work of art, by the eminent scenic painter Mr. W. Beverley, and would deserve separate notice on its own merits. Great attention has been paid in the construction of the theatre to the personal comfort of the audience, both as regards ventilation, easy and commodious seats, provision for the exit of fire, and shelter for large numbers at its entrance on rainy nights. The architect is Mr. Solomons. An opening address, written for the occasion by Mr. H. M. Acton, was read by Mr. Calvert. The dresses were of the richest description, and the scenery, by Mr. Grieve, of Covent Garden, and Mr. Holding, of Manchester, was superb. The opening night was a brilliant success.

The Queen has appointed Cornelius Henderickson Kortright, Esq., to be Lieutenant-Governor of the Island of Tobago.

M. De Lesseps has been created a Count. On the 20th of August he was preparing for a long journey into the interior, and meanwhile he had shipped "a live gorilla" for England.

THE VISIT OF THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES TO SWEDEN.

We continue the series of our illustrations of the visit of their Royal Highnesses to Denmark and Sweden, from the sketches by our Special Artist.

The Engraving on our first page is a view of Gripsholm Castle, where the Prince and Princess were entertained by the King of Sweden on Friday, the 30th ult. It is situated on the Mälar Lake, about forty miles from Stockholm; and, with its red towers and black-capped roofs, is very striking as seen from the lake. It stands on a jutting piece of rock, with its base concealed in the view by a grove of birch till the visitor is entering the gateway. A little way to the right lies the little town of Mariefred, which is like most of the Swedish villages—that is to say, it consists of red wooden houses, with windows picked out in white, surrounded and mixed up with garden and lime-trees, while from a slight elevation the church spire towers above them. The castle of Gripsholm is of great antiquity. About the year 1300 it was founded by Birger Jarl, with the suggestive name of Griphus, as it said at that time to have held the third part of Sweden in his clutches. It has been restored at various times, though not, the towers, with the exception of the roofs, which were then somewhat different in shape, being erected as they now stand. In the eighteenth century many of the Royal state prisoners were lodged in the castle; introducing, by-the-way, some square, modern windows, besides painting and pointing the fine old brickwork. In the outer courtyard are the gigantic pieces of ordnance, not unlike one of those in St. James's Park, but of greater size. These an inscription in ancient Schwonic declares to have been captured from the Russians by Le Gardie early in the sixteenth century. They are each 18 ft. long, and made apparently of bell-metal, part of the end nearest to the mouth of the piece being fashioned in imitation of the head of a wolf—a name which the inscription referred to declares that they were actually known by. They are splendid specimens of the Swedish gun-founderies. Age gives them the titles of "the Bear and the Sow." Among the historical associations connected with the Castle of Gripsholm are those of the imprisonment of King Eric XIV. and his brother, John III., who, in the sixteenth century contended fiercely and long for the Swedish throne; and, prevailing alternately in their political struggle, confined each other by turns in a gloomy tower of the castle. The celebrated Duchess of Gripsholm is remembered by many Swedes, besides many other interesting persons, some good contemporary likenesses of whom, such as Richelieu and Mazarin, Oxenstiern, and Charles I., which were presented to the Swedish Court. To this place the Prince and Princess of Wales, with the King, Prince Oscar, and several other members of the Swedish Royal family, were conducted by the Arbogs steamer from the port of Stockholm, in a pleasant little voyage of two hours, sailing on their way to Drottningholm, for the Queen Dowager. The Royal party, having reached Gripsholm at four o'clock, spent about two hours in going over the interior of the castle, which showed the outlines of the towers wonderfully well, and, in the surrounding darkness was intensified by the illumination, blue lights were burnt to point out the way on board the vessel, in front of the castle, in the illuminations, as a few fir-pile covers here and there to lighten the sombre effect of the woodwork. At seven to dinner, in accordance with the Swedish custom, the trays containing bread, butter, caviare, and other provocatives to appetite were handed round, with little glasses of brandy. All Swedish dinners begin with this, and all Swedish repasts. Then the Prince and Princess of Wales proceeded to apartments prepared for their accommodation, which, with the members of the Royal family whose guests they were, they rested for some time, and shortly before nine o'clock the whole party re-embarked in the Arbogs which was ready to returning to Stockholm. And lights had been fixed to the walls of the castle, which showed the outlines of the towers wonderfully well, and,

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will of the Hev. John Le Marchant, of Belmont, Ryde, Isle of Wight, was proved in the London Court, the executors therein appointed being his son, Mrs. Emily Le Marchant, and his son, the Rev. Joshua Le Marchant. The personalty was sworn under £50,000. The testator has devised to his eldest son, Joshua Le Marchant, all his freehold and copyhold estates and farms, together with a legacy of £2000. To his son Edward and daughter Emily he has bequeathed legacies of £2000 each. To his relict he has left his residence at Belmont; she has bequeathed to her the whole of the residue of his personal estate, including foreign, bank, funds and securities. THE INDIANS OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

The British Colonist publishes the following account, received in August, from the Governor's Aide-de-Camp, stating the result of an expedition into the interior of the country:—

"The Aide-de-Camp's party soon came upon traces of Macdonald's men, the victims of the last massacre. Kegs of nails, boxes of carpenters' tools, and pieces of assorted broken articles of ironmongery, were found at the bottom of a steep hill, bounded by a bullet, yeast-line, ropes, candles, and surcingles. Mr. Brew's party followed up the traces for a few miles, and then returned to rejoin the expedition. For several miles scattered evidences of white men's industry presented the eye, and the numerous dead cattle, the carcasses of horses, with their pack-saddle, became the property of the Indians. There a Siwash tomb of logs, pompously decorated with the clothes of the murdered men, evidently died hard. Under a bullet deposited in a dying effort by Macdonald. About fifteen yards from the tomb lay the mangled remains of a white man. The colour had made sad havoc with it, stripped naked as it was, but the features were recognisable as those of Macdonald's unfortunate friend, Mr. Higgins, violently distorted, but still preserved, lay half a mile off; and a few hundred yards beyond that, the remains of Mr. Cox were found. Here, in the last stage of decay lay many articles of trade.

On the following day the earthworks, which Macdonald and his party kept so long from the volunteers to destroy. A couple of miles further Brew's party came upon the palisaded blockhouse of Alexander, the famous Indian chief of the Bonlbas. The trees had been all cleared around, and the building lopholed; and, as the works were capable of affording a strong defence against Indians with energy at the back of determination, the appearance of smoke which arose from the conflagration unfortunately gave notice to the Indians of the approach of the party. A magnificent view was from there to opposite side of the lake, and some heavy storm-rards it was discovered that a score of dead o dozen miles had been hastily slaughtered. The Indians were traced in the direction of Bute Inlet.

Breaulet Lake was reached by the New Westminster party on the 6th of July. By digress the Indians, who had kept aloof at first, began to familiarise themselves with the presence of the white men, and Mr. Brew's interpreter, finally, Alexby, the Chilcoten chief, was induced to present himself to the Governor. He came on horseback, with a considerable retinue, and was great embarrassment and some alarm in his manner at first, but, by degrees, both disappeared, and he agreed to take another step for the punishment of the murderers. The supply of provisions having become extremely low, it was a matter of regret to the Governor that the reception of Alexby's men and his party was not of a liberal nature. On the 20th of July Mr. Cox and his men returned to Bentinck. For the first time, intelligence was received from the Coola Indians in fishing, the New Westminster party would have been reduced to considerable straits for want of food.

Mr. Cox's party travelled far beyond Tatla Lake, and reached a country lying between the head waters of the Homathco and Bentinck arms, where they found evident traces of the Indian rebels having lately been in that part on the bend-waters of the Homathco, with a considerable force. Mr. Brew was only only a portion of his force, the same spot of the country previously traversed by Mr. Cox, in which Mr. Brew's party had encountered the rebels and fire warriors attended on Mr. Brew. The last intelligence from Bella Coola River announces that the valley is content with Indian Commissioner Lenihan's wish for the re-establishment of peace. The Governor has availed himself of this favourable feeling to organise, without additional expense to the colony, a third party, consisting of a few New Westminster volunteers, ten marines, and some friendly Indians, who will, with every prospect of success, make a descent upon a valley not far from the Great Slide, in which it is known that several of the murderers of M'Donald's party are now hid.

Sir Annastasio Typaldo Xydias, of Corfu, late one of the members of the Supreme Council of Justice in the Ionian Islands, died suddenly on the 6th ult. Sir A. Xydias was one of the Ionian judges whose nonreappointment to office formed the subject of a memorable discussion in Parliament previous to the abandonment of the protectorate.

Intelligence has been received of the loss of the missionary ship John Williams on Danger Island. She was 300 tons burthen, and was built expressly for the purpose of taking out missionaries and enabling them to pass freely among the islands of the Pacific. This ship was purchased by the present Bishop-elect children in England, and launched at Harwich in 1844. All on board are reported safe.

The second Session of the third Parliament of Vancouver Island was opened on the 21st of July by Governor Kennedy with a speech, of which the following is the main portion:—"The discovery of a gold-field within the last few days having so much absorbed the public mind and enlarged the prospects of this colony, I have deemed it my duty to call you together to aid me with your advice in the measures which may be most suitable to the Legislature, already so well informed on the subject, the position in which the crown lands and revenue of the country will be placed, and what I feel confident that you will concur with me in the opinion that, under the altered prospects of the colony, it is necessary that the Legislature should at once be continued. The management of the Crown lands and the expenditure of Crown revenue, freed from the control of the Legislature, as proposed before, I do not desire to incur, unless devoting upon me as a necessary duty. The mining interests fall for trial every other consideration, and the colonial Legislature is, in my opinion, the proper power to frame laws and regulations for their management and guidance. The adoption of such measures I should, I fear, lead to complications which may prove detrimental to the best interests of the colony. A large number of miners have already taken out licenses and registered their claims, and, the number being daily on the increase, I desire, if possible, to have the advice and assistance of the Legislature in framing wise and just laws for their encouragement and protection. The rules and regulations now in force have been found subject to modification or alteration, pending the enactment of permanent laws. Intended to meet an emergency, and to give necessary protection to miners only, they are manifestly inadequate to the rapidly-increasing importance of the subject. There are, doubtless, difficulties in the way of a prompt adjustment of the question, but none so formidable that they cannot be surmounted by the cordial co-operation of the Legislature and the Executive, which it is to me my desire than my duty to afford."

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

W. B.—We have heard that a match is now playing at the Grand Cigar Divan between Mr. Blackburne, the famous blindfold player, and a very promising young amateur, Mr. Bird. We shall endeavour to obtain the games.

HERMES STAT.—If Black in Problem 1073 take the Bishop with the King on the first move, White plays 2. B to Q 6th, and mates easily and obviously in two more moves.

HERMES.—It is a lengthy game; but in the opening of the Commerce it is hardly difficult enough for the class of players who solve our Problems.

(If he had attacked the Queen with by Kt to K 4th, White would have played P to K 6th. If Black then took the Pawn with the Knight, White would play Q to K 3rd, and if Black then took the Knight with the Queen, White would play P to K 7th, and if Black then took the Queen with the Knight, White would play P to K 8th (ch), and Queening his Pawn, would win the game.)

and Black very soon gains.

IS THE FIRST MOVE AN ADVANTAGE IN CHESS?

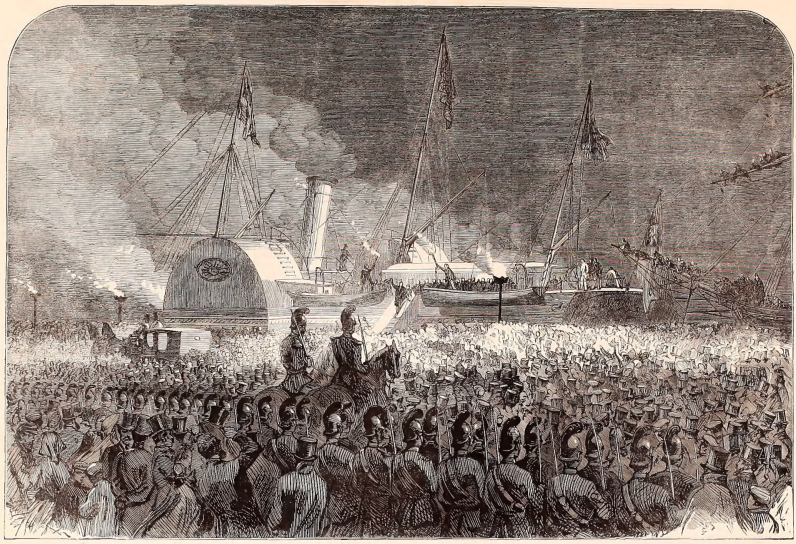
As some aid to the determination of the much-vexed question whether, and to what extent, a player benefits by having the first move, a correspondent sends us the following Table, in which he has classified the results of about 600 games played at various occasions between great players, and the lines of play for the first player, those by the second, and those which were drawn:—

	Won by
	First Player.	Second Player.	Drawn.
Petroff's Defence	29	2	0
Scotch Gambit	21	8	0
Evans's Gambit	26	14	4
Ruy Lopez Knight's Game	16	9	5
Q P Pawn Counter Gambit's Opening	3	2	0
K Knight's Gambit	12	8	3
Allgaier Gambit	4	3	1
Muzio Gambit	7	9	1
Sicilian Opening	14	20	8
French Game	9	14	6
Philidor's Defence	19	13	6
Knight's Defence to the Bishop's Opening	7	5	0
Centre Gambit	5	7	0
King's Bishop's Gambit	12	16	3
King's Gambit declined	3	6	3
Irregular openings	12	9	4

The above statement tables pretty exactly with similar analyses, and tends to prove what we have often asserted, that the first move in Chess is worth more first has a positive advantage over his adversary, but that in the close games that advantage is extremely small, and that games absolutely proved. It would be well if our correspondent, or some other amateur with time to spare, selected and arranged and submitted them to the same investigation, and then made the result known.

The Glasgow Sentinel states that the ship in which Captain Semmes is understood to be about to hoist his flag is the Clyde-built vessel Sea King, lately employed in the China trade. She has gone to sea in a suspicious manner, it is said, and safely laden with coal.—Mr. Henry Labouchere writes from Liverpool to the Times, positively contradicting the report that Captain Semmes was a passenger in the Laurel. The Laurel had been duly advertised and cleared for Bombay, and sailed from Liverpool on Thursday last. She is a yacht of 102 tons, duly cleared for Montevideo, where she is intended to be sold as a tug-boat. The idea of using her for a vessel of war is simply ridiculous.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

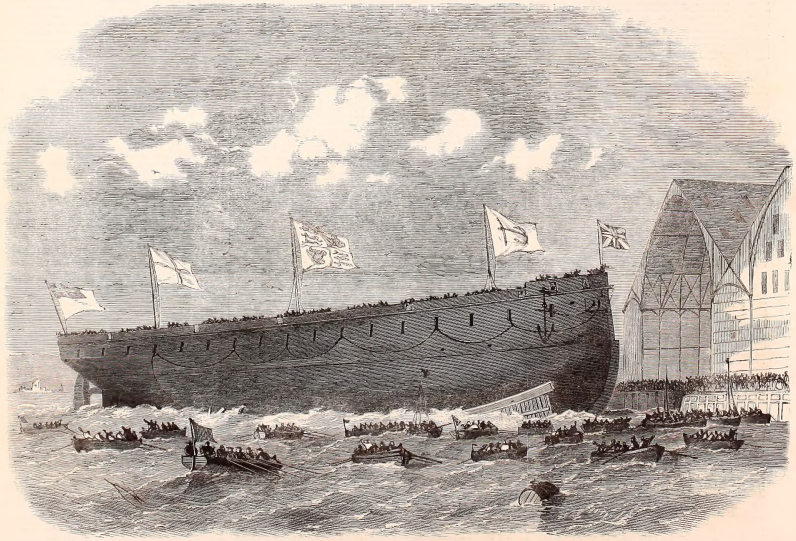


THE Second October was "full of running from end to end," and Ellis de l'Air showed, from the style in which she got home, Bronze 4 lb. and chopped her down a quarter of a mile from home, that the three great prizes of the season have fallen to decidedly the best horse and mare in it. A match between her and Blair Athol is the only thing wanting to bring it to a brilliant close. This year is the Eclipse centenary, and hence there is a singular appropriateness in the triple victory of the chestnuts. The doubts as to General Peel's gameness, which received strong confirmation in the Doncaster Cup, when Cevey could only just cons an effort out of him, caused the ring to lay 6 to 5 on Cambuscan, who had 2 lb. the best of the weights in the match, and won in very easy gamely. General Peel is matched on Monday over the T.M.M. course against Paris, his Two Thousand second, and prize of £50. The 9 lb. penalties which Langdown and Gladiateur played havoc with their chance forthe Prendergast, in which they finished level for the third place, about a length behind the winner, Dr. Bedford Blair, who bought for £50, at Mr. Cookson's Doncaster sale. Save and except Liddington, the two-yearolds of this year run in a very poor manner, and Mr. Merry, who has been purchased by the Marquis of Hastings for, it is said, £000 gs., meets brothaker at 7 lb. better terms for the Cambridgeshire than he did last week. Lord Coventry has bought Tim Whiffler for 750 gs., so that "the little brown horse" who made such mincemeat of Asteroid at Doncaster, and has since been frequently have won both Derby and St. Leger as cleverly as Blair Athol if he had been entered in '62, is certain to have a good wind chance given him.

The coursing season in Scotland has been good so far. Three of Mr. Rodger's—Lochinvar, Lochiel, and Lochleven—and Lady Aylmer's were left in for the Ardrossan St. Leger, and the Messrs. Dunlop divided the Castle Stakes with Despendo and Dixie. Mr. John Jardine won the Border St. Leger with his Hawick, Mr. Gilbert, from Bolton House, beating in the fourth ties and the run up Mr. Gibson's Gunboat and Gunner, two very fast dogs by Gunboat—Jacobite. Cheyne, who ran up for this stake last year, was now first for the Roxburghe Stakes, and it is to be hoped he will have the Waterloo Cup chance given him next week, as he has not come out to be tried with him last February. Dr. Richardson's Gertrude, the winner of twelve out of thirteen courses, was the first notable casualty of the way of the season. Mr. Spinks brought out a batch of puppies by Sea Foam for the South Lancashire Puppy Stakes, and one of them, Sea Mist, who was worsted in his turn when he met the winner of the Oaks, Mr. F. Johnstone's Fieldfare, for the Claret Jug. The Scarbrick Cup did not tempt out a large muster, and the knock-out ties between Scots Grey and Tunnac, the former adding another laurel to the celebrated Seagull and Sourocks litter, one of which, Sixty-three, threw trounce, and was drawn after a fourth in the Oaks. Brown Lady scored the Southport Stakes for Kingwater, whose popularity in Cumberland has caused a fee to be claimed after him at Bramley Moor.

Although, if our memory serves us, Captain Becher had not ridden a steeplechase since the Liverpool Spring Meeting of 1847, his name was a very familiar one to sportsmen, old and young. He began life in the Worcester or General's department, and was one of the staff in charge of the field equipments for the Peninsula. He was a captain of yeomanry when he made his first appearance as a hurdle-racer in connection with the Grand National, which, in 1839, when fast and hurdle races were established at No Man's Land, and Mr. Harry Goodwin's Conrad, by Cervantes—Miss Letty, carried Mr. Coe, from Nosley Wood to the Copplow. His match on Napoleon against Mr. Osbaldeston on Grimaldi, over the Dunchurch country, was a great affair with the sporting world of the day, in which Grimaldi "fairly gave him the palm, were in very active requisition for one hundred yards down the hill." In fact, as "Cuthbert" says, the latter "if he came to grief in a brook, a ivy favourite and "yawning" component of Mr. Coe's team, he was remarkably stirring days. The Captain was on Grimaldi when the grey died very close passing the winning post at St. Albans; but it was on Vivian who, to use his own graphic expression, "fairly and gallantly spooned over the doubles in the Vale," that he won such a national reputation on the Liverpool course on this wonderful animal in a very remarkable match against the late Marquis of Waterford on Cock Robin, from Shakespeare Holt to the Ram's Head. The Irish brown had fenced as well throughout, but that the Ram's Head have been quite out of it, if the Marquis, with his usual ill fortune, had not got stuck in a wide ditch at Lemington Village, and was so lucky, as he had twice over to play second to Flacrow and Jerry, and when, in in April, 1838, the race for the Mount and Lottery, from Lemington Grange to Flechrose, "the one very big fence settled the question for the young 'un." In the first Grand National at Liverpool, Conrad was the Captain's mount for the first circuit, which is somewhat out of doubt rails with a ditch on the off-side, and his rider was glad to bag the ditch-side in the first round, and steered clear of the rails and conferred his name on the spot for all time. In figure he was quite a pocket Herodes," and also to ride in the earlier part of his career under 10 st. Mr. Bowes's dashing-looking Lottery, by Sir Bowes's Jaggor, at Heaton Park, when he broke one stirrup-leather and won after all on that most awkward-looking colt, placed the Mr. Very first rank as a finisher. His nerve and knowledge of pace were also first-rate, and he was one of the best judges of the nature of big, which left a permanent lameness and made it almost impossible for him to mount without aid, threw him gradually out of the ranks of riding-men, and at last time he was a sack inspector on the Great Northern Railway. However, a change for better with him, for he was enabled to retire on his last few years in comfort at Maids-hill. He was not very often at races lately; indeed, Mr. Hendley's meeting were more than once; and he seldom missed a Monday at "The Corner." Mr. Joy's forthcoming picture will lack a very essential element if the figure of the little copper-bottomed Captain is not introduced, and he is rightly-curled white whiskers is not among the groups of celebrities round the old Prince Regent's Pavilion. He was in his sixty-seventh year, and was buried on Saturday, at the Willesden Cemetery.

LAUNCH OF H.M.S. ROYAL ALFRED IRON-CLAD STEAM-RAM.



ANOTHER iron-clad ship of war was added to our navy afloat on Saturday, when the Royal Alfred, a powerful ram of the Royal Oak class, was launched from No. 3 slip, Portsmouth Dockyard. On this occasion there was an immense concourse of spectators; not less than ten thousand persons visiting the building slip during the day in order to "knock away the dogshores." A large number of privileged visitors occupied the reserved seats. There were also present with Admiral Sir Michael Seymour, G.C.B., Port Admiral; Rear-Admiral George Elliot, Superintendent of the Dockyard; Vice-Admiral Harry Edgell; Lord William Paulet, C.B., Mayor Gourrad, commanding the South-Western District, and Staff; Colonel Gordon, commanding Royal Engineers; Captain Caldwell, of the steam yacht Captain Scott, C.B., Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, of the flag-ship Victory; Captain A. Cooper Key, C.B., of the Royal Adelaide; and Officers who are studying gunnery on board the last-named ship. The bands of the Royal Marines and the 3rd Hants (Dockyard) Artillery Volunteers played several national airs. There was a numerous attendance of lady visitors; and Miss Alice Crodock, daughter of the master shipwright, had the honour to name the ship. At high tide at seven minutes past eleven; and it was necessary that the ship should be got off about half an hour before the tide had reached its highest point. At twenty minutes past ten every eye was fixed upon the ship, as it was evident from the bustle and dull thud of hammers that the time had arrived for the last dog-shore to be knocked away. On a buzz of voices; but when the order to "knock away the dogshores" was given the noise of the operation was observed. Miss Alice Crodock dashed the bottle against the oak, and the ship was named the "Royal Alfred," amidst cheering from all sides. The ship moved, a slight cracking was heard, and the noble ram slid gracefully and almost noiselessly into the sea, amidst ringing cheers from ten thousand voices and the National Anthem from the bands. With the Royal standard at the main, the Admiralty ensign at the fore, and the St. George's flag aft, the noble vessel swung round and made her first voyage to the Pitch-house jetty, where she now remains, waiting to receive her boilers. Our Engraving is from a sketch by Lieut. A. J. Bedwell. The Royal Alfred was laid down in 1859 for a 91-gun line-of-battle ship. It is well known that the days of these old liners were, even at that date, numbered; and as there was a demand for ironclads she was ordered by the Admiralty, in June, 1861, to be converted into an armour-plated ship of war. She was afterwards lengthened amidships, and her bow and stern altered, to convert her into a ram. She is a kindred ship to the Prince Consort, Royal Oak, Caledonia, and Bellerophon. The following are her dimensions:—Length between perpendiculars, 273 ft.; keel for tonnage, 232 ft. 8½ in.; breadth, extreme, 58 ft. 5 in.; breadth for tonnage, 57 ft. 2 in.; breadth, moulded, 56 ft. 4 in.; depth in hold, 19 ft. 6 in.; burden in tons, 5045 20/94. Although designated an ironclad, the Royal Alfred has not yet been plated. Her 4½-in. armour, manufactured especially for her sides, is in readiness to be bolted on.

COLONIAL FEDERATION.

OF late years the action of our Imperial Legislature in reference to our colonies has been reduced almost to the vanishing point. Occasionally some private members of Parliament have brought forward abstract motions on colonial questions of comparative detail; but these gentlemen, being somewhat dilettanti politicians who, seeking to be solemn, are only ponderous, give reasons to those who ought to listen to them—reasons for staying away; and a dull lingering debate, ending in nothing, has always been the result. Governments have long ceased to take up colonial subjects in an actual and active sense, and seem as disinclined to bring in a declaratory bill relating to any of our dependencies, as if it were a measure for imposing taxation on colonists. All movement in the Colonial Office, as a branch of the Executive, depends very much on the idiosyncrancy of the Minister of the department. In the time when Earl Grey sought to govern as well as to reign, he contrived to send a fiery cross through all our colonies, and left them in so angry and tumultuous a condition that his successors were fain to adopt a policy of forced conciliation, which, being interpreted, meant letting the colonists do just as they pleased; so that in 1855 a Secretary of State for the Colonies in an assembly of Australians, and in the presence of four or five ex-secretaries of his department, deliberately stated that he had found that it was his business not to attempt to govern at all. In fact, the Colonial Office has been turned into a mere registry for recording the decrees of Colonial Legislatures, which often consist of measures intended to act as virtual prohibitions of the import of the productions of the mother country. This is especially the case with regard to the Canadas; and, as we believe, since the passing of the Act for the appropriation of the Clergy Reserves no bill has been brought into the British Parliament which professed positively and directly to legislate for those provinces. It will, therefore, be something novel next Session to have a great Colonial subject brought forward, and one which will occupy the serious and careful attention of the Imperial Legislature.

The proposed federation of our North American colonies has, we think, excited less public observation, and certainly less public interest, than it deserves; and, in some instances in which it has been discussed, it seems to have been somewhat misunderstood. It has been supposed that the several provinces of British North America have been choosing delegates and appointing meetings for the purpose of revolutionising the Government and forming a federation, not only without the consent or approval of the Sovereign of the realm, but without even intimating such an intention formally to her Majesty's Government. This is wholly a misconception, and it is simply the fact that the various steps which have been recently taken by the Canadian Executive to bring about a federation of all the colonies in those degrees of latitude and longitude were adopted with the full knowledge and consent of the Imperial Government. It is known that the project, if it did not originate with, has always received the sanction of the present Governor-General of Canada; and the colonial Ministry, which has been recently formed, and which is in the nature of a coalition of men hitherto of opposite politics, has for the basis of its policy this very question, and amongst them, in truth, the only bond of union amongst them. To that Ministry the Governor-General has formally declared that he was prepared to give his aid to the scheme and to forward it with all his authority. So far from the colonies assuming to act in this matter as independent States, they do not propose to be satisfied, as they technically might, with the assent of the Queen to the project: but the Imperial Parliament ill be asked to concur in the Act of Federation. The course which it is proposed to adopt is as follows:—The conference now sitting at Quebec having agreed upon a plan for the confederation of the different provinces, the project will be submitted to the Legislature of each colony. If the decision of the conference be accepted as the policy of the Executive in each province, and be agreed to by the respective Legislatures, the next step will be to submit the matter to the Colonial Office, whence it will come up as a Cabinet question, and a Bill will be introduced into Parliament by her Majesty's Government for the realisation and confirmation of an idea, the result of which will practically be the addition of a new nation to the world.

So far at least as the Canadas are concerned, some change in the system of government which would adapt itself to the peculiarities of race and interests which belonged to a country so variously populated, was absolutely indispensable. For years the administration of the two provinces of Upper and Lower Canada has been nearly an impossibility, owing to the political and social struggle between two parties, which had degenerated into factions. There being a rooted opposition of interests between these two parties, which, by the constitution as it has now for many years subsisted, were nearly equally balanced, Governments were constantly falling to pieces, and Governors of Ministry were so frequent that the Executive showed like a kaleidoscope, and general elections were becoming annual, and but for the intervention of the Governor-General might have become half-yearly. In this juncture a wise and patriotic course was adopted by the leaders of the two great parties, by which they sought to deal effectually with the sectional feelings and prejudices of the Canadians. It is not easy to conceive any system which would be so applicable to the state of things, which calls so imperatively for a remedy, as a federation which would combine local self-government and a general and supreme, and therefore an impartial, authority over the whole of the provinces. Something has been hinted at this plan being un-British, and smacking too much of an American character. However that may be in theory, in practice the system has received the sanction of eminent discovery British statesmen which can be said is that they were un-British. William Pitt and Edmund Burke more than half a century ago laid down just such a scheme of government for the Canadas, and within the last twenty years similar opinions have been enunciated by modern statesmen, and tend to prove that then still more vexed question of Canadian Government.

These who are best qualified to judge conceive that the present opportunity should not be lost for a complete consolidation of all the British North American colonies, and that the present which is proposed should not be confined to the Canadas alone. In the Imperial Legislature the subject should be treated on a great and comprehensive scale, and the status of these vast dependencies and their relations with the mother country, even to the minutest point of detail, be settled and for ever. It may well be that the blood—for there are many proofs of it—that the North American colonists have no desire to drop the distinctive appellation of "British." They do not, in the abstract, propose to sever those ties which they so called ideal—that is, ties of blood and nationality—and the time has arrived when they must take on themselves the duties and responsibilities of sons who have grown to men's estate. It is not in the nature of human probabilities that those great provinces can always be permitted to hold their present relations to the mother country. They cannot expect that Great Britain will always without consideration send her navies to defend their shores, or that British troops shall always without consideration stand ready to guard them against attack. They must look forward to an early day when the whole of British America shall stand together, and, in a close alliance and heartiest sympathy with Great Britain, be prepared to maintain that attitude of self-reliance which ought to belong to a people numerous enough, and living in a country more than extensive enough, to make up a great and powerful nation. The first step towards the accomplishment of all this must be the settlement of their political institutions on a sound and healthy basis, in order to inspire peace and harmony at home and confidence abroad. If any such settlement does take place as will, particularly in the case of the Canadas, do away with the evils which have so long distracted these provinces, a new era of prosperity will doubtless open upon their people. The bitter sectional strifes of the past will be forgotten, the great questions of the day will be schemes of public improvement, the development of their internal resources, the extension of their foreign commerce, the advancement of their agricultural interests, and the progress of political economy and social reform. On such a condition of her North American colonies Great Britain can look, not only without jealousy, but with the heartiest satisfaction, the purest respect, and the highest admiration.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

The Emperor Napoleon left St. Cloud on Wednesday for Nice, to pay a visit to the Emperor and Empress of Russia, who arrived there last week. His Majesty was accompanied by General Fleury, Vice-Admiral Jurien de la Gravière, the Marquis de Caux, and Count Walsh. The Emperor of Russia has given a banquet to the battalion of Chasseurs of the Guard. Prince Wittgenstein proposed a toast to the honour of the Emperor of the French, and the commander of the troops responded by proposing the health of his Russian Majesty.

The Constitutionnel publishes an article of M. Paulin Limayrac, in which it is stated that the Convention of the 15th of September having been concluded in good faith, its execution will be equally so. The same paper combats the exaggerations both of the extreme revolutionary party and also of the ultra-Conservative party, who distort the text of any treaty, however clear.

The Bill for the Suez Canal project is under serious consideration of establishing a public works fund, to occupy the same position towards undertakings of public utility that the whole of France as is fulfilled by the wood fund for the city of Paris.

The town of Druffice (Vendée) has been the scene of an interesting ceremony of the inauguration of a statue of Henri de la Rochejaquelein. Napoleon I. erected over a monument fountain in the market-place.

The Minister of Public Instruction, M. Duruy, has granted to the poet Jasmin's widow that his pension will be continued to her.

Mexican despatches state that the main army of President Juarez had been defeated near Durango, with the loss of twenty guns; that the French had occupied Matamoras; and that the Mexican Generals Vidaurri, Quiroga, Doblado, Zaloaga, and Garza had made their submission to the new Emperor.

SPAIN.

The announcement has been received that the Bank of Spain has concluded a loan of twenty millions reals with Senor Salamanca.

It is stated that the insurgents of San Domingo have tendered to the Spanish Government their submission within days.

Admiral Pareja has left Madrid for the Pacific, to replace Admiral Pinzon.

ITALY.

The Chamber of Deputies was reopened at Turin on Monday, under the presidency of Signor Lanza. A long minute was read from the throne present, among whom were the members of the late Ministry. The new Ministers, with their General Della Marmora, sat together on the table the Franco-Italian Convention, and the diplomatic correspondence relative to it. Signor Lanza brought in a bill for the transfer of the capital to Florence, which measure he thought might be declared urgent and discussed at once. An investigation into the recent disorders at Turin was also to be carried on by a committee, and was rapidly agreed to, and a committee of nine was appointe for the purpose. The sitting was then stated to have been quiet, and the military were not called out. The sittings of the Parliament have been adjourned.

The following sentiments with regard to the Convention are not favourable. The Diritto of Turin published, on Saturday, the following statement:—

Caprera, Oct. 16.—That the guilty should desire to find accomplices is quite natural; but that the innocent should participate in the crimes of others and of men who have polluted Italy by the Convention of Sept. 15 I did not expect. With the Convention of Sept. 15 Italy has received the bonnet of contumacy of his prisoner, not in two years, but in two hours.—G. GARIBALDI.

For publishing this document, which, there is no reason to doubt, is genuine, the Diritto was seized by the Government.

There seems, however, to be little doubt that the Franco-Italian Convention will be carried out in its integrity in the course. On Tuesday 200 Deputies assembled, and expressed themselves unanimously in its favour.

A performance of the "Demi Monde" of Alexander Dumas fils recently took place in Turin. When the actor came to the passage, "Every Code is bad, but the Code Napoleon is the best," a perfect thunderous storm arose from some of the audience and prolonged applause from others.

On the 17th inst. the population of Faenza inaugurated with fitting enthusiasm the monument they have set up to the memory of their late townsman, the eminent discoverer Torricelli, at the Baths.

A band of about one hundred insurgents, among whom are several deserters, have taken refuge in the Forest of Consiglio. Several deserters at Cadore and Belluno are endeavouring to join them.

PRUSSIA.

The young Princess son of the Prince Royal of Prussia, was baptised last week at Berlin, the names given to him being Francis Frederick Sigismund.

The Prussian Moniteur contains a decree instituting a new military decoration called the "Cross of the Assault of Düppel." It is in bronze, and has on it the date 18 April 1864, and the words, "Soldiers of soldiers who took an active part in that feat of arms. The cross is to be worn attached to a blue watered-ribbon, with a white border.

The Duke Frederick of the duchy of Lauenburg has made a revolution in favour of annexation to Prussia. A semi-official journal of Berlin says that Prussia is ready to enter further negotiations, to accept the sovereignty of Lauenburg, proffered by the Diet of that duchy, as Austria is the sovereign paramount of Lauenburg and has expressed that which the Cabinet of Berlin will conscientiously respect. Nevertheless, Prussia will neglect nothing to meet the wishes of the population.

DENMARK.

A telegram from Vienna states that Count Rechberg has tendered his resignation and that it has been accepted by the Emperor. Count Wickenhoff-Fleury is mentioned as his successor.

The opening of both Houses of the Reichsrath is announced to take place on the 12th of next month.

GREECE.

The different factions in the Assembly have been quarrelling over the terms of the new Constitution till the patience of the young King's advisers is worn out. His Majesty, on Wednesday week, sent a message to the Assembly complaining of the slowness of the debates and the waste of time, and that unless a speedy decision was arrived at the Constitution and the electoral law. At the end of that period, if the sitting, the principal of the Ionian Islands, would himself liberty of action, throwing the responsibility on the Assembly." The message also contained a proposal for the creation of a Council of State as a preliminary to be personal, for the creation of representatives. Yesterday week the Ministers declared that the signature of the Constitution was for the public interest, and that the Assembly as then in body were contained therein. The Royal proposal was adopted, after considerable, by a majority of 130 to 114, ten others abstaining from voting. In its sitting of Saturday last the Assembly revoked the decree whereby six members of the Mincoli Ministry, during the reign of King Otho, were deprived of civil rights for ten years.

A distorted version, collected from the Greek papers, of a recent despatch from Earl Russell to Athens was telegraphed to London last week. Instead of threatening interference, as represented in the telegram, the original of Earl Russell says:—"As regards the request made by Count Spennceck for the exertion of English influence on the National Assembly, you will say that, although her Majesty's Government would not object to her Majesty's representative expressing to any deputies who may speak to him on public affairs an opinion in favour of an early settlement of the Constitution, it would not be consistent with the principles of her Majesty's Government to attempt to influence the decisions of the Assembly, while to do so would be setting a bad example, and might lead other Powers to exert influence in some other and more objectionable direction. The less foreign Powers interfere in the internal affairs of Greece, the better will be the prospect of internal tranquillity and external peace for that kingdom."

AMERICA.

We have news from New York, by the Persian, to the evening of the 15th inst.

There had been no more fighting in the neighbourhood of Richmond, General Grant had returned to Petersburg, after having visited President Lincoln at Washington. General Lee's account of the engagement on the north of the James River, on the 13th inst., stated that the Confederates attacked the Federals on the Charles City road, drove them from two intrenched lines, and captured six guns, but that, finding the enemy further strongly intrenched, they did not press the Federals. On the other hand, General Grant's report stated that on the 7th inst. the Federals only lost 400 men, while the Confederate loss amounted to 1100 men.

General Longstreet was said to have superseded General Early in the command of the Confederates in the Shenandoah Valley. The Federals under General Sheridan had retreated down the valley as far as Strasburg. He was pursued by the Confederate cavalry under General Rosser, but had, we are told, routed his pursuers near Strasburg, taking eleven guns and 300 prisoners. During his retreat he had devastated the whole country, and had burned all the houses for a distance of five miles.

Several guerrilla bands have entered Maryland.

General Sherman, writing to Major-General Halleck, Chief of the Staff, on the 9th inst., from Alatoona, reports as follows of the state of things in Georgia:—

I reached Kenesaw Mountain, Oct. 4, just in time to witness, at a distance the attack on Alatoona. I had anticipated this attack, and had ordered from Rome General Corse with reinforcements. He arrived in time to defeat the enemy losing some 200 dead and more than 1000 wounded and prisoners. Our loss was about 700 in the aggregate. The enemy captured two small garrisons at Big Shanty and Ackworth, and burned about seven miles of our railroad; but we have at Alatoona and Allatoona an amount of provisions. Blood, observing our approach, has moved rapidly back to Dallas and Van Wert, and I am watching him in case he tries to reach Kingston or Rome. Atlanta is perfectly secure to us, and this army is better off than in camp.

The Richmond journals had published a despatch announcing that Rome had been taken by the Confederates, who had made 3000 prisoners; and other Southern journals assert that the movements progressing in Georgia rendered Sherman's position untenable. A flotilla of Federal transports which was ascending the Tennessee river had been attacked by General Forrest's Confederates, who destroyed two transports and captured two others, the rest with some loss.

The Confederate General Price had proclaimed his intention to remain in Missouri, and had passed the Osage River and moved westwards. His army, which was said to be 20,000 strong, was pursued by 8000 Federal cavalry under General Pleasanton, who had engaged its rear at Jefferson, while the Federal General Curtis, coming from Kansas, engaged Price's general Price in front. The result is not reported in the Northern accounts: it may therefore be presumed to have been unfavourable to Price, as he has carried out his intention to retreat in the State. Price's head-quarters were, at the time of the latest news, at Harrisville.

It is reported that the preparations which were being made for a Federal attack on Wilmington, both by sea and land, were nearly completed.

President Davis has returned to Richmond from his visit to Georgia.

Vice-President Stephens has written a letter in which he says that the only key-note to peace is the acknowledgment of the sovereignty of the States. He favours an armistice and a convention of the States, and believes that the question of the humanities of the confederacies—union or union—would adjust themselves to the interest of parties and the exigencies of the times.

The elections in Indiana and Ohio were said to have resulted in a victory of the Republican party by a large majority, but in Pennsylvania the Democratic party had gained largely, and the result was awaited to decide the result of the election. In the State of Maryland it was expected that the popular vote would support the adoption of an anti-slavery constitution.

The "Democratic National Committee" had issued an address protesting against the suppression of Democratic journals and the imposition of test oaths at the elections in Tennessee. This address was couched in threatening language, and vehemently denounced President Lincoln's revolutionary purpose.

The death of Chief Justice Taney, of the United States Supreme Court, is announced. It is reported that Mr. Case will succeed him.

The bids for the loan of 40,000,000 dols. amount to 60,000,000 dols. The tenders range from par to thirty hundredths. The public debt is now estimated at 4,000,000,000 dols. The price of gold has risen at New York, the last quotation being 119 prem.

The case of the passengers of the steam-ship Ella has been decided in favour of the Government.

The New York Commissioners of Emigration report that in the year 1864, up to Oct. 1, 151,208 immigrants had arrived in the corresponding period of 1863, the number was only 119,412.

JAPAN.

The force which was expected to sail from Yokohama to demolish the forts reported by the Japanese Prince of Choshi for the purpose of preventing access to the inland sea through the Strait of Simonoseki was to be composed of eight English men-of-war, mounting 184 guns and conveying a battalion of marines, together with three French and five Dutch vessels of war, and a steamer chartered by the American Minister. At the date of the last advices the troops were in Yokohama in order to guard the European settlement against any attack.

A monument to the memory of the philosopher Kant was unveiled at Konigsberg a few days ago.

The officers of engineers in the garrison of Antwerp last week gave a dinner to General Tedesco, the minister of Schutzpoch. Sixty persons were present.

The sentence of six months' imprisonment on a boy for stoning walnuts at Bristol was reversed by the Recorder, and the imprisonment for one month.

The chief of the gang which attacked the Swiss mail recently has, to his turn, been arrested at Milan. His name is Gianoti, and he is described as a most skeptic man, who offered a desperate resistance to the officer who arrested him.

The British American Conference at Quebec have, according to a New York despatch, unanimously agreed upon the confederation of all the provinces. A proposal for the Crown to appoint the head of the Confederate Executive, and the governors of the provinces has been favourably received.

A Bombay despatch, dated the 2nd instant, states that the Persian Gulf telegraph cable had been repaired, and that the land line had been completed between Bushire and Teheran, whence despatches had been transmitted in twelve hours to Bombay. The telegraph from Teheran to Bagdad was to be completed next month, but a frontier dispute between the Persian and Turkish Governments would have to be settled before it could be worked.

The Solicitor-General and Mr. Morrison, M.P., addressed their constituents, at Plymouth, on Thursday week. The Solicitor-General alluded to the effort made by the Government to preserve neutrality in respect to the American war, and especially to enforce the Foreign Enlistment Act. For three offers he had received at his office, he regretted to say, but strongly in favour of non-intervention in foreign affairs, and avowed that his opinions on reform, the ballot, and church rates were unchanged. A vote of confidence in the learned gentleman and his colleague was agreed to at the close of their speeches.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1864.

IT will scarcely be supposed that we shall devote this column to a discussion of the means by which certain performances, that at a dull time have attracted more attention than anything of the kind is worth, are managed by or for the actors. The affair may be dispensed of in a very few words. Some clever juggling is done, and the method by which it is accomplished seems to have been but half explained. This is only to say that two or three American conjurors have contrived a trick that has puzzled their English rivals. The most amusing feature in the business is that the public innocently yields to the stratagem, more clever than the feats themselves, of getting a jury of amateur gentlemen, not one of whom probably can perform the simplest trick in parlour magic, to decide upon the merits of a performance at which the artists have been engaged for years. Because these novices cannot say how hands are slipped out of a rope, or how an arm is pulled through a hole, we are told to believe that the tricks are done by mystic agency. This is the really ingenious device. We should be ashamed to waste words on the ludicrous pretence that the American brothers are aided by any agents except the adroitness of themselves and their confederates, or on the preposterous statement that they do not know how they manage the thing.

But inasmuch as with the rather uninteresting though clever feat which has caused so much town-talk are combined some of the ordinary performances of the so-called spiritualists, we take occasion, in the interest of sound sense, to call upon all rational men to discourage such things as far as possible. We do not direct the observation specially against these last arrived "wizards from the west;" they are but following in the wake of others who have made a good deal of money out of British fools, the number of whom is legion. But we say that it is the bounden duty of every healthy-minded man to help in putting down scandalous and mischievous exhibitions. The spiritualist humbugs have wrought an amount of misery both in America and here which many persons have no conception. We need not go into an analysis of the human mind to account for the success of such persons; everybody knows that a love for the marvellous is inherent in most people; that a very little imagination will persuade a man very long way: that few lovers of excitement can reason, or care to do so; and that the number of very silly people is very great. We are not addressing a remonstrance to dupers or an argument to the duped; both classes are beyond our reach; but we write in what we may call a public manner, and we do so to sensible men. We say to them that the spirit-performances, ludicrous humbug as they seem to healthy and manly people, produce most cruel evil upon the women who patronise such trickery, and that their effect upon nervous persons is terribly permanent. It is within the knowledge of nearly every physician that families have been made wretched from the temporary or enduring lunacy of some loved but not strong-minded member who in an evil hour has been lured to the spirit-juggling. We feel all the difficulty of addressing rational men to believe this. The conditions of the jugglers are such palpable evidence of unblushing trickery, and the performances, when they do come, are so ludicrous and contemptible, that it is difficult not to laugh outright at the idea of anyone being disturbed by such idiotic displays of fire and water. When a future historian of England shall say that in the middle years which Faraday, Owen, Huxley, Murchison, Lyell, and Phillips were flourishing; at a period when we flung wires across continents and oceans to carry our messages; when airy nadgs appeared to be converted into steam-vessels; and in a few hundred years hence; when mountains were tunnelled and rivers bridged that excursionists might have a cheap holiday;—when the Macaulay of the next century shall write that at this time educated ladies and gentlemen met in rooms, and at the order of fingers sat in darkness to hear mere fiddles and mystic knocks, and went away believing that disembodied spirits or supernatural influences had been at work, the reviewers of the day will probably say that, like Macaulay, the new writer used his imagination freely and coloured up a picture, or that he asserted a monstrous fact as proved. But in police reports into a general description. But he will be wronged. The number of persons who believe, or try to believe, in the spirit humbug is very considerable, and it is distressing to think that in an age which is, on the whole, unreasonably, of the highest reasonableness, so many persons should be so large a number of helpless and foolish people. But, as the fact is so, and as the folk who trade upon the fact make a rich harvest, it is of no use to ignore that fact. We accept it as we accept any other proof of human folly.

We are not sure that the law cannot deal with it, but we are more toleration should be extended to these spirit-jugglers than we should extend to a bookseller who should introduce immoral works into our houses, or to a visitor whom we should overhear telling blasphemous or indecent tales to our children. While the question was making its way in public opinion, we simply indicate; and now it has got hold of a great number of persons, to the detriment of their souls and bodies. It is the women who are the chief sufferers. If a man ventures to tell you that he has spirit-visitations, and that a message from the unknown world revealed to him where he had left his pipe or his card-case, even the cynical courtesy of modern society does not prevent you making it tolerably clear to him that you consider him one of two things, neither of which you are likely to be called. But when women tell you that the spirit-jugglers put them in communication with the souls of lost children, that tiny hands touch theirs in the darkness, and that tiny whispers recall nursery voices long hushed, it becomes time to take measures for the protection of those who cannot or will not protect themselves against such cruel impostures. We are by no means clear that English law will not deal with the aristocratic lady's juggler as it does with the maid-servant's fortune-teller. We should like to see the experiment tried, and we know there is not a London magistrate who would not gladly lend all aid to the punishment of these profane and mischievous cheats. A spiritualist juggler at the crank, waiting until his imps shall release him, will be a wholesome sight for dupes and dupers. We cannot have our household happiness disturbed by vulgar and heartless speculators on the curiosity and weakness of women. It is time that we see whether the spirits or the police are the stronger "agency."

Lady Jane Bruntfut, a descendant of Henry III., married James I., of Scotland, a descendant of Bruce; and from this alliance is clearly traced the descent of Andrew Robertson, Gladstone, substitute of Rose, whose daughter Anne married Sir John Gladstone, Bart., of Fasque and Balfour, and bore several sons, including the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Rutherford, and latterly of Mr. Grantham. Her internal decorations are very complete. The committee who have kindly bor-ne Garibaldi include Colonel Chambers, Mr. John Richardson, and Mr. W. Bruce, with others who took an active part in the arrangements for the reception in England a few months ago.

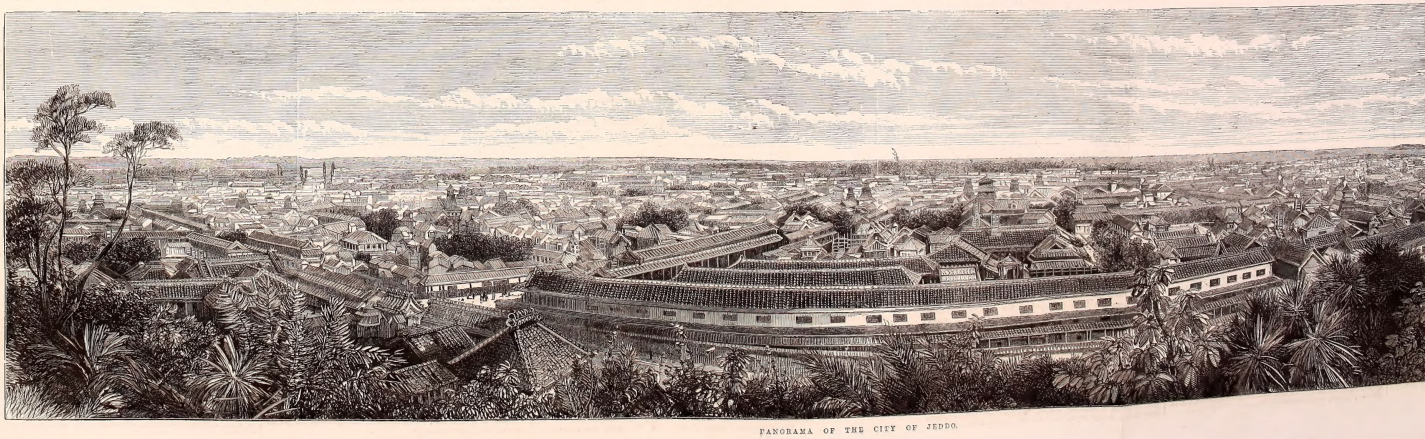
THE BRITISH FLEET AT YOKOHAMA.

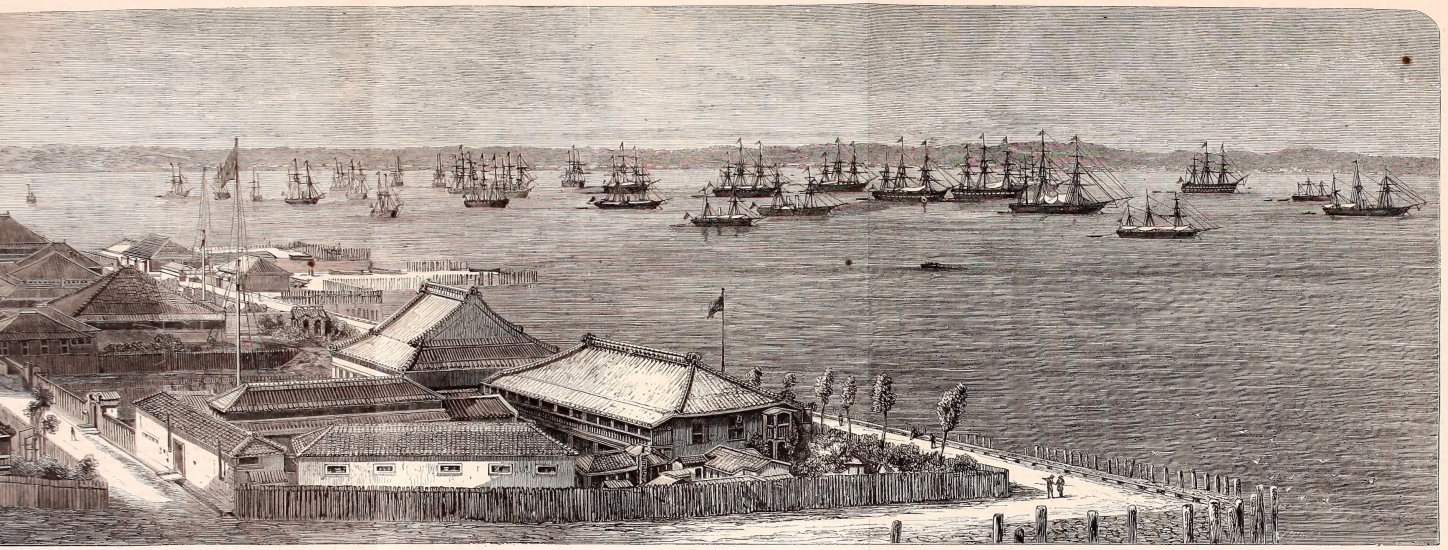
SCENES IN JAPAN.—THE CITY OF JEDDO AND THE BRITISH FLEET AT YOKOHAMA.



The recent intelligence from Japan looks like an approaching renewal of hostilities with one of the Daimios, or half-independent Princes of that country, who are nominally vassals of the Tycoon. The Prince of Nagato, it appears, has refused to open the Inland Sea, and fired across the bows of H.M.S. Cormorant when that vessel made the experiment of passing his batteries. She and H.M.S. Barossa accordingly returned at once to Yokohama, and it was believed that the fleet would sail for Simonoseki before the end of September. In the mean time, orders have been sent to the British naval officers in port at Shanghai to charter vessels to convey 1200 tons of coals to the Inland Sea for the use of the fleet, and to proceed thither to join it. A further detachment of her Majesty's 67th are under orders for immediate embarkation, and two companies of the 2nd Beloochees are to accompany them. By the time these reinforcements have arrived Sir Rutherford Alcock, the British Plenipotentiary in Japan, will have a fleet of seventeen vessels of war and 1500 troops, besides marines, at his disposal. We have engraved a view of the squadron, which was lying at Yokohama at the time of the departure of the last mail. It is from a photograph taken by Signor Beato, of that place. Another photograph of his gives a fine panoramic view of the great city of Jeddo, the capital of Japan. This view is taken from a hill in a central position, and shows about half the city, which occupies a square, each side of it being seven miles long, and is believed to contain a population equal to that of London. Within the city are parks and gardens, adorned with shady trees, especially around the Imperial Palace and the other palaces belonging to the feudal aristocracy of Japan. The houses in Jeddo are chiefly built of wood, instead of brick or stone, because of the frequency of earthquakes. The situation of this city, with its extensive sea front, at the head of a bay of the same name, is healthy and convenient. A river (the Todagawa) flows through the heart of the city, besides several smaller streams. The seaward front is partially defended by a line of detached fortresses or batteries erected on a sandbank at a distance of one mile from the shore.

THE TAEPING WAR IN CHINA.

It seems likely, by the last news from China, that the capture of Hoo-Chow, following so closely upon that of Nankin, will have put the finishing stroke to the suppression of the Taeping rebellion, which has distracted a large part of the Chinese Empire for twelve or fourteen years past. The illustrations which we have this week engraved, from drawings by Mr. F. L. Bedwell, are three in number. The first two represent the peculiar costumes of the Imperialist and Taeping officials respectively, with some of their military uniforms. In the group of Imperialists we see a couple of mandarins, whose rank is to be distinguished by the colour of the glass buttons upon their hats. Their dresses, except upon state occasions, are neat and simple, contrasting favourably with the gaudy attire of the Taeping chiefs. The strangest-looking troops of the Imperial army are the so-called "Tiger Corps,' whose uniform is striped in imitation of the skin of that ferocious beast. Each of these soldiers carries a huge shield, on which is painted the most hideous face that can be imagined. The duty of these grotesque soldiery is to frighten the enemy by their wild appearance, shouts, and gesticulations. In the second Engraving, which displays some of the Taeping costumes, we observe that one characteristic sign of the insurgent party is that their hair is allowed to grow all over their heads, instead of being confined to a long pigtail such as that which invariably adorns the loyal Chinaman's head. The Wangs, or Kings, of the Taeping faction, and all their vassal chiefs, are usually attired in yellow, crimson, or purple robes; their head-dresse are of coloured paper, with tinsel ornaments upon them. Even the lower class of Taeping officers are decorated, as much as possible, with a variety of colours. Just behind this group are the ruins of the famous Porcelain Tower. Our third illustration is a view of the palace at Nankin lately occupied by the Tien-Wang, or "Heavenly King,' who is the supreme prince and pontiff of the Taepings. This palace was destroyed by the Imperialist forces when the city was captured a few months ago.



THE WAR IN NEW ZEALAND.

Though it might be a premature conclusion to expect the immediate and final settlement of all our disputes with the Maoris from the submission of the Tauranga tribes, there is good reason to congratulate Sir George Grey and Sir Duncan Cameron upon their success in that quarter. It may, indeed, be hoped that the clemency and the con-

Though it might be a premature conclusion to expect the immediate and final settlement of all our disputes with the Maoris from the submission of the Tauranga tribes, there is good reason to congratulate Sir George Grey and Sir Duncan Cameron upon their success in that quarter. It may, indeed, be hoped that the clemency and the conciliatory spirit of the Governor of New Zealand, who is familiarly acquainted with the native mind, will induce the Waikato, the Taranaki, and the Wanganui tribes to follow the example of those at Tauranga. The Tauranga people were convinced by the decisive affair at Te Ranga, on the 21st of June, following soon after the capture of the Gate Pah, that it was in vain for them to contend against the British arms. They have accordingly submitted unconditionally to the Queen's Government, and Sir George Grey has promised that settlements shall be assigned, secured by Crown grants, to them and their children, in such localities as they may select, while they are to be supplied with seed, potatoes, and the means of settling on their future estates. "In order," he says, "to mark our sense of the honourable manner in which you have conducted hostilities, neither robbing nor murdering, but respecting the wounded, I also promise you that, in the ultimate settlement of your lands, the amount taken will not exceed one fourth of the whole." At the same time, he has assured those tribes which remained friendly to us that they shall have a substantial reward. As an illustration of these satisfactory negotiations on the shores of the Bay of Plenty, we have engraved a sketch just sent us by Lieutenant H. Bulkley, of the 68th Light Infantry, representing the scene at Te Papa Mission Station, on the 26th of July, when the first party of the natives met Colonel Greer, Bishop Williams, and Archdeacon Brown by appointment, for the purpose of laying down their arms and taking the oath of allegiance. The British soldiery in the meantime of Papa were confined to their quarters on this occasion, lest the warlike spirit of the Maoris should again be roused by the sight of men who, when they were so lately engaged in deadly conflict. They brought in about 150 stand of arms, chiefly old muskets of the Brown Bess pattern, with some double-barrelled fowling-pieces, hatchets, and clubs. Amongst these articles were four swords, which they had taken from the unfortunate British officers who fell into their hands at the assault upon the Gate Pah in April last.

THE FARM.

ALTHOUGH the fair was only thinly attended, and the whole number of beasts was, we are told, not much more than double what Carwardine used to bring on his own account, last week was a great one for the Herefordshire cattle. Two bulls, a cow, and a bull calf averaged 102 gs. at the hammer, and the rainfall, which has become very general, put the business in a still better humour. Mr. Crowder sold Mr. Thomas by Sir Benjamin, who has wrought such heifer wonders for Mr. Roberts, was put up in the auction-mart on Wednesday. A Mr. Jeffries, of Brecknorshire, gave the 100-guinea bid; but Mr. Monkhouse had sent "Sam" with an unlimited commission, and Mr. Baldwin, on his behalf, bid another 10 gs. and got the beast. The latter gentleman who has now three out of the four Newcastle first-prize Hereford females in his stalls, would not have bought Sir Benjamin to-day, on the following day, at Westonbury; but Mr. Freeze stuck to him, and was only shaken off at 101 gs. for the fortune-getting young bull. He is a most magnificent cow; and no doubt whether there is really a better of any breed in the United Kingdom. Kate the Second (sire of Charlotte's Beauty), which was second to her at Newcastle, could only make 40 gs.; and seven cows averaged as nearly as possible 50 gs. The sale of these beasts at Leominster was delayed so long that the post was gone; and a special messenger had to be sent by the night-train to Hereford with the news. Everybody, no doubt, gave a great prestige to the sale, in which seventy-nine lots (including four pairs of calf steers and many young calves) averaged £27 6s. The thirteen bulls only averaged £41 5s., but the average would have been much better if only a very few of the Lord Nelson stock (nearly all of which were sold before) had been in the market. However, Mr. Duckham fixed on one of them, Minnie the Second (96 gs.), which had hit to its Sir Benjamin dam, and it went, with Flora the Fourth, to Mr. Lonsdale, the valley of Clydesdale in Scotland, along with Cato, from the Baydham Court herd, whose Commodore has only been beaten by Sir Benjamin in the show-yard at Ludlow, in a competition with bulls much older than himself. Mr. Monkhouse bought three lots for 69 gs., and Mr. Hewer, for (40 gs.), the greatest winner there, but much wasted from an injury to the stifle. One of the most remarkable lots of the day was a Sir Benjamin bull Emperor, with a Duchess dam, sired of his sire, for which Mr. Taylor, of Shiwells Court, was the last bidder at 80 guineas. Still, the excellent cow and her calf (sired by Spangle the Second's bull calf by Sir Richard was sold, and Mr. Russell took off his hat and left a volley of cheers when Mr. Taylor, of Thingehill, got him at 121 gs. Sir Richard, like Sir Benjamin, the young, was beautifully made up; but there was some prejudice against him, and Mr. Cowper bought him (it is said for Mr. Hewer) at 100 guineas. Mr. Wenlock's agent purchased some lots.

Great hopes are entertained in Herefordshire of the meeting of the Bath and West of England, which is to be held there next year. The site is the racecourse; and, in fact, precisely the one which was offered to the Royal. It is magnificently suited to the purpose, as the implement trial-ground is in close proximity to it. At the dinner Mr. Lechmere showed that the county could pay most manfully for their wretched arrangements during the Royal Worcester meeting, and the committee seem unanimous in not carrying cattle gratis to and from the Hereford show, seeing that they grant the privilege to two other meetings at Ludlow and Leominster. As applied to the Royal, we believe this grant of carrying to be a very vicious system. The show is intended, not as a human rat farm stocked exclusively by a number of the same things at every breed, none of which should be sent unless they have a very reasonable chance of winning a prize or an H.C. or C. Carrying them gratis puts a premium on a lot of hand-raters being sent to every show, and the spectators are not only wearied out by the length of the catalogue and the expanse of the show yard, but the judges can't make the trick which is put on them of delivery at their expense. The result is that they are constantly overdone and knocked up, and really good stock gets fearfully knocked about and imperilled by delays and shunting. Mr. Duckham also complained bitterly of the small space allotted to the Hereford cattle-yard, especially in the case of shorthorns, in the Journal, and he, as well as the audience, would have been much interested in hearing what he had to say on it there. "Men have no faith in high spun sentiment who put their trust in goddess and in heaven"; but when they have a grievance they like to "fling a British right of grumbling on the floor" towards a cure, and certainly the time and place did not seem inappropriate. As Duckham is right, the Taurean show has a grievance, and he will no doubt be heard again on the point. Herefordshire men have a peculiar habit of forgetting what they like to remember and forget that, good as they are, they form as yet an infinitesimal portion of "the roast beef of old England," and the judicial dismissal of them in a very few lines, although full of fun, is not "good," has fairly lighted the flame.

The censorship of the Royal Agricultural Society seems likely to cause a contest. Mr. Tom Parrington, who established the £100 prizes for blood sires and the hoemil shows in the Cleveland Society, and was in other respects a most efficient secretary there for several years, is in the field; and Mr. John Booth, of Kilerby, in a circular dated Oct. 26, has announced his intention to oppose him. Mr. Booth is at present, we believe, an office bearer in the society. He says in his circular—"I am induced during the many years I attended the meetings of nearly all the principal agricultural societies in England and Scotland, and having also had a good deal to do with the management of agricultural shows, I have had the most extensive intention of noticing how such meetings should be beneficially conducted." The election takes place on the 17th of November.

The sale of the herd of the late Captain Bull, one of the greatest practitioners with shorthorns before us, in England, well attended. The fifteen pure-bred females averaged £48 18s. 6d., and three bullcalves £31 5s. The highest lot was Wood Belle (Mr. Massey, 98 gs.), a first-prize yearling at Dublin Spring. Wood Flower, which was the Townley Double Butterfly at the Dublin Spring in 1863, made 71 gs., and Richerche (Mr. Stanley), a very great winner, 70 gs. more.

The seven bull calves at the annual Keir sale, near Stirling, averaged £46 10s. Mr. Longmore of Rattrie, the Valley of Clydesdale, Scotland, is Scotland, gave the top price (578 15s.) for Knight of Stirling by Knight of the Border. Tansy, in calf to Forth, made £45 3s.; the average for forty Lismore top lots was £18 18s. 5d.; and the three-year-old filly Betty headed the Clydesdale quotations at £40. The Stirling bull-calf sale was a good one, and twenty of them averaged £30 17s. Since the establishment of this sale, in 1842, there have been six better, or at least as good, taking records and average jointly into consideration. The highest price, however, was £89 15s. for Conqueror by Champion of England, which was only exceeded in 1863 and 1861, when it stood at £115 10s. and £105. One of the lots, half-brother to the above, was bought by Earl Fitzwilliam's agent for his Lordship's Irish estates. We learn from an excellent account of the herd in the Benfshire Journal that it now numbers about 250 females.

The Prese of Vienna states that about 400 indigent families of Vienna have been ordered on emigrating to Mexico.

MEMBERS OUT OF PARLIAMENT.

AT a bucolic meeting in Leicestershire, a few days ago, Lord G—rge Manners, who belongs to that county but sits for another, having to make a speech, innocently stated that he had no hope that he could either amuse or instruct his audience. Probably no surprise was felt on the occasion, the majority of whom must have known what to expect to be called upon to be thankful even for the smallest mercies. A preserver, or at least a part of it which runs the Extra-Parliamentary talk of the season, may, however, take the liberty of giving a correspondent a general one; and they may congratulate themselves that at last, out of the mass of the unrepresented, there has been found a constituency for meetings, gleams of intention to instruct and amuse have been recently apparent. For the first Lord Stanley, and for the second Mr. Bernal Osborne, are responsible.

A positive manifesto from Lord Stanley. Proximate premiership evidently upon the brain. Explanation of the Derby policy to the electors of King's Lynn, but was addressing the nation. A vast, comprehensive, and statesmanlike line of policy could be protestantinsular conceived only by a statesman who believed that country thirsted demanded such a thing from him. The question then arises, has the deliverance, when delivered, proved to be satisfactory? So far as touching on every conceivable subject which the chief of a Cabinet might have to consider, there is no fault to be found with it; but of original suggestion, of flashes of political genius, of the implanting of statesmanship, of lofty conception of the great principles of Government, there is, we regret to say, little to admire. If the views called upon tersely to designate the policy indicated, we should say, that it was conservative. If the single word "Tory" be applied, it is more instructively elaborated than the deductive argument. If "Tory and no shuffling" be added, the result might be so; but if the "shuffling" be omitted, there is no occasion to press the childish proverb farther. The middle course is ostentatiously laid down as the best course;—the dead level is always the safest course. Mr. Lowe has said everything that is medium is best; and, in short, the dissertation may be taken as a trimming discourse, and as a fair specimen of the undoubted, if doubtless, we believe that Lord Stanley is essentially the man for his age,—constitutional. He will adapt himself to the utilitarian spirit of the times with far greater facility than Lord Derby ever will. He has had to contend with his high spirits, his taste for the ideal, even in politics; and the Derby Government will be remembered for having kept his intellect to the very verge of genius, and which, though characteristic of his race, prevented the possibility of his becoming a popular leader. The Earl of Derby has not been able to retain the first office in the State for any length of time; but it is no violent effort of prediction to assert, that if Lord Stanley ever becomes Premier, he will retain that function, in all instructive soberness, for many a long year.

Unless we are much mistaken, Mr. Bernal Osborne did not condescend to intercommunicate with his constituents at Liskeard. If he did not, the reason is easily to be traced in the speech with which he addressed the electors of Dover on the same eventful occasion. He will adapt himself to the utilitarian spirit of the times with far greater facility than Lord Stanley will, when it Buckstone performs in it the part of Mr. John Dibbins, a Government clerk, who has joined some fellow-clerks in an excursion to the Derby, and become there acquainted with his wife's dressmaker, Mrs. Dibbins' suspicions are accordingly aroused, and she immediately puts a check on her husband's liberty, taking the housekeeping on her own hands and allowing him weekly pocket-money, against which Dibbins naturally rebels. The dressmaker (Miss Swanbon) has a resource in the worst extremity; she threatens to "invite the Major" (Wilkins) to one Major Crowby (Mr. Rogers), who, she pretends, has made advances to her. At length, the dressmaker's paper appears, as much in the consciousness of the wife as to that of the husband. Its wishes, however, merely to rent her first floor as a lodger, preparatory to his marriage, and, with the consent of Dibbins, is permitted. Mr. Dibbins now has wealth enough to excite the perplexities of the situations, and full force to the odd turns of expression in the dramatic dialogue.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

SAM ROGERS, who has lost a very good master in the late Duke of Cleveland, opened the Houghton Meeting by winning a match for Admiral Rous on Saffron. Breese (8st.) was quite unable to give away the hitting of weight (or we wanted to be beat), and the four-year old in a Cambridgeshire Course Plate, in which the second place of Iphigenia foreshadowed success at last for Mr. Naylor, who scattered the Criterion field with his Chattanooga. This son of Orlando and Lycaonia was sold at the Royal sale last year for 380 g. Some few thought him the best-looking colt there, and among them John Scott, who sorely wished to buy him for one of his employers. Hardly a two-year-old, save Lullington, can keep his place, and, with no penalties find them out as once, Kenuig (9lb. ex.), Adhar (9lb. ex.), and Gladiateur (9lb. ex.), were difficult, and, in the eighth among the fifteen, which included the 720-guinea Regalia and the 500-guinea Contract of Mr. Cookson's sale, and 5lb. to 1 was taken freely about the winner for the Derby. He is trained, we believe, at Hooton Park, by the head groom, who had charge of Macaroni during Golding's illness last year. The excuse for General Peel's defeat by Cambuscan was that the match took the mile by surprise, and that the horse had been trained at Doncaster. At all events, he was far fitter on Monday, and made very light of Paris at 7lb. over the T.M.M. Brick, who ran in stockings, was all the rage among the Newmarket people for the Cambridgeshire; but still the public could not get over the Dearsley's running of Gratitude, and met Mr. Cox's colt about Ackworth with the fact of the mare having shown much more speed up to the Bushes. Saccharometer was never in better form, and there was a very good fancy in some quarters for Lullington, although he weight was by no means a flattering one. Stockinger came and went and came again, without any assignable cause, and was left to Mr. Swindells, was going for him, although it was not exactly one of the "dead" when, in the language of the Last Minstrel, "he smoke's."

Thirty-eight went to the post, and out an hour and two minutes were wrote in three false starts. A number of a mile from home the line of horses stretched across the course was broken, and Gratitude appeared in front, with Cookson, Vivid, Ackworth, Lullington, and the Highflyer's dana colt at her quarters; whilst Skeffington, on the upper ground, was apparently full 3 st. to the good. Down the hill Gratitude gave way; and a distance from home Ackworth, with Tomato on his near-side, came away from the rest, and, after a brilliant finish, the Marquis of Hastings's colt beat the Lady by a head; the Highflyer's dam colt beaten three lengths from the Baron's filly, Columba a bad fourth, Gratitude fifth, and next to her Vivid, Twilight, and Skeffington, the last lot being Brick (beaten before he had gone half a mile), Cauconcite, Mrs. Somerville, Golden Drop, Accident, Jack, and Queen of Trumps. The unit was 7 st. 12 lb., and was £2285; and the Marquis of Hastings, who bought Ackworth for £2000, after running third to Thalestris, Nun Nook, and Lady Elcho. All the silverets of the Danebury stable, which is now far the largest in the kingdom, must, to judge from their public running, have thrown in well. This is the seventeenth time during twenty-five years that the race has been won by a three-year-old; and the place of Tomato, 6 st. 9 lb., at the finish was another proof how good the three-year-olds are this year. Lasercost inaugurated the race in 1839 on a four-year-old, and carried 8 st. 5 lb. Sultan was third to him, and nothing, save Ralph, 8 st. 7 lb., has won it with a higher weight than 7st. 10 lb. Johnny Armstrong, at 16 lb. for the two years, could do nothing with the Highflyer's colt for R.M. crowns, and the last race was postponed in consequence of the darkness.

Joe Maiden, the celebrated huntsman of the Cheshire and the North Staffordshire, died on Thursday week, after a short illness. He hung up his scarlet last April as he left the kennels and the farm in Shropshire. He was born in 1795, had a turn with "the merry harriers," and at fourteen became whip to Mr. Whitmore, of the Aldenham country. He subsequently hunted the Oakley Vale, completed his education, and then, for two seasons, he and Will Staples whipped in to the Bellingham Grafham, which he hunted his own hounds in the Alfrighton country and mounted his men on 400-guinea horses. The Surrey Union and the Warwickshire completed his first and second whip apprenticeship, and then Mr. Shaw engaged him to hunt the North Warwickshire. During his four seasons there he met with that fearful accident by which he was led into the bolting copper, which caused him such intense suffering for six and twenty years. Still, in spite of all the pain of the crippled state of his leg, he came to Cheshire, and, with one-eyed Tom Rance as his first lieutenant, showed prime sport for fifteen seasons, under six masters. A most conserving little fellow never hunted a fox, and, with Corporal or Peveretl, he made very light of "the doubles," and held his own in the front rank.

The parson, the squire, and the major.
The purple, the blue, and the black.

Lord Delamere on his celebrated mare Sir Richard Bevoke on his Irish rat-tailed mare; Mr. Leycester of Toft on his Astbury horse; Captain France on Brenda; Mr. Wilbraham Tollemache on his "pudding and rushing cheshire nimare;" Mr. Cunliffe Maegregor and Captain White and The Cours were all gaung together. Leighton was his favourite mare; Hannibal was a rank Cheshire hound; and a run from Stapleford Gorse, th. 20m., without a check, and ending with a kill slap in the middle of a bank he ever rode in. At the close of the '45 season he retired (with a present of £250 in an embossed tankard) to an inn near the kennel; but drawer covers was more to his mind than digging in the bar, and as his call to the bar did not prove very profitable, he accepted Mr. Darneyington's offer once more to hunt the North Staffordshire. About 1856 his leg became so bad that it was taken off below the knee; but, under the advice of Mr. Warburton, of Bruton Street, Kensington, the contraction of the muscles, which had been pronounced hopeless, was completely got over, and the stump was made quite serviceable. He had a wooden leg did not answer the purpose very well, but a new English one did; and for six or seven seasons he was enabled to get about his kennels in capital style, and very very fairly with the cub-hunting. The best consolation he received for his departed member was another cap with the same crest as before. He was no better judge of hounds, and he delighted to preside at puppy-shows, along with Jem Hills, Harry Ayris, and the other Nestors of the scarlet. As Mr. Warburton wrote of him, he was a right pleasant companion to ride home with from hunting; and with tensions, gentlemen, and farmers he was alike popular. He was proud of his profession; and the hunting men were proud of him, as one who combined patience, quickness, and the science of hunting, as well as riding, in a most eminent degree.

The Wiltshire Champion Meeting, at which 200 greyhounds were engaged, was a great success. Mr. G. Randell won one challenge bracelet with Rising Star by Beacon from Polly beating Mr. Thompson's Theatre Royal by Cardinal York from Maid of the Mill. Mr. Strachan's St. George, by Seagull, and M. J. Jardine's Jacob divided the other bracelet, or, rather, the bracelet and the brooch, their owners tossing up, we conclude, for choice. Patent would not try at all in his second course for the challenge cup, and Thrah right early away from him; but she at last ran and beaten by Other Days (brother to the celebrated Chloe), to whom Mr. Berrow's Bit of Fashion was second beat at last. The four dogs which ran the fourth ties all belonged to "the club," which have thus beaten "the world" most handsomely. Mr. C. Randell was in great form, as his Revolving Light, own brother to Rising Star, won the Druid Cup. The Puppy Cup at Bendrig has fallen to Mr. Thompson's Triumph; and at Dirleton Mr. Gibson not only won the St. Leger Stakes with his Grappler, but divided the Ouanston Stakes with Golden Dream and Coronoria. Although in his fourth or fifth season, the old white ran as gamely as ever, and we hear that he now retires to the stud.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

THE demand for money having been less active and the exports of the precious metals larger than was anticipated in our previous report, a slight change in the rates of interest and increased transactions have taken place in the market for Home Securities, at slightly enhanced prices. The value of money is still extremely high, and likely to remain so.

There is still a large supply of capital on offer for discount purposes. In some instances, the rates have been reduced to 3 per cent. Bills of the best class are readily taken, but not more paper than is necessary.

Thirty days' bills ... 3 per cent. Four months' bills ... 3½ per cent.
Sixty days' bills ... 3 „ Six months' bills ... 3½ „
Three months' bills ... 3½ „

In the Stock Exchange money for short periods has been obtained at from 4 to 6 per cent. Throughout the Continent money is still commanding high quotations. In the leading capitals the highest rates are:—

	Bank rate.	Open market.		Bank rate.	Open market.
Paris	4 per cent.	3½ per cent.	Berlin	5 per cent.	4 per cent.
Vienna	7 „	6 „	Madrid	9 „	9 „
Trieste	7 „	6 „	Amsterdam	3 „	2½ „
Frankfort	5 „	4 „	St. Petersburg	8½ „	8 „
Hamburg	4 „	3½ „

The inter-colonial banks and discount-houses continue to allow 3 per cent. for money on call; 4 per cent with seven, and 7 per cent with fourteen days' notice of withdrawal.

There was a fair amount of business transacted in the Bullion market, at somewhat higher terms. RAISING THE COLOSSAL BRONZE STATUE OF HERCULES FOUND UNDERGROUND IN THE CAMPO DEI FIORI AT ROME.

TIMBER BRIDGE OVER THE RIVER WAI-AU-UA, PROVINCE OF NELSON, NEW ZEALAND.

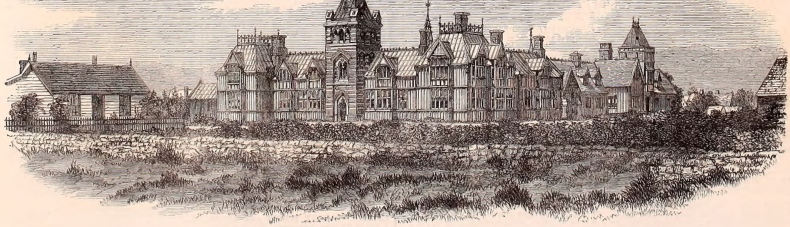
Hercules, whence it may have been removed and buried in later times, to prevent its being carried off by the despoilers of Rome. There are, however, some who insist that it is a portrait of Domitian represented as Hercules. It has been raised to within ten feet of the surface, and men are busy exploring, in the hope of finding one of the feet, which is missing. The club has come up in three pieces, and the lion's skin, which has hung over the shoulder (similar to that of the Theban Hercules in the Vatican), and which has evidently been cast separately, is especially interesting, as showing the mode in which the ancients executed their work of casting.

Our Engraving, which represents the scene of raising the statue, is from a sketch by M. Carli, a French artist at Rome.

TIMBER BRIDGE OVER THE WAI-UA-UA, NEW ZEALAND.

We have the following from a correspondent:—"The River Wai-au-us (or Dillon) is the largest in the province of Nelson. In several places, when flooded, it is one mile in width, and it has always been the most dangerous obstacle to travelling on the inland road between the provinces of Nelson and Canterbury. The Provincial Government having voted the sum of £1500 for a horse-bridge, Mr. J. Blackett, the provincial engineer, prepared a plan of one, which was entirely novel in its conception, and which had one great recommendation—economy in construction. The only tender, however, put in for the erection was for £3200; the Government declined this, and placed the entire charge of the work in the hands of Mr. Henry Handyside, C.E., of Nelson, who has erected the bridge shown in our Engraving. The quantity of timber used was 30,500 ft. of black birch, which is a strong and durable wood; the whole of this was cut in the Nelson province, taken by water to a small port thirty miles north of Lyttelton, and then carted to the site of the bridge, a distance of sixty miles; many parts of the road requiring to be made passable, and several rivers having to be crossed before the timber could reach the place where it was to be used. Among the materials of the structure are two ¾-in. wire cables, which are attached by powerful screws on each side of the roadway, 'fished' to a width of 21 ft. in the centre, and supported at intervals by outriggers. These two cables were fixed across the gorge 75 ft. apart, and several feet above the highest part of the bridge. The two ends at one side were fastened to eyebolts securely leaded into the solid rock, and the other ends tightened as required by means of two 1½-in. screws passing through a log securely fixed in a horizontal position. On these two wires was suspended a travelling stage, like an inverted table, with four iron sheaves let into the legs. This arrangement secured the means of transporting men and tools across the gorge; and, with a tackle which could be attached to any part of the stage as required, all the timber was lowered and held until secured by the workmen below. Another advantage of this method was, that the two cables formed a certain and permanent guide for the line of the bridge; and with a single plumb-line the work could be checked as it progressed. But one of the greatest conveniences obtained by the stage was in the time saved when a shift of tools and tackle had to be made on the work below. At that giddy height a man required the full use of his hands to climb from one part to another; and on such occasions the man on the stage could make all the necessary dispositions of the tools and timber for the men below. This simple device so greatly lessened the cost of erection as to bring the total cost of the bridge to £2160, being £1040 less than the tender.

"The dimensions of the bridge are as follow:—Length of road way, 320 ft.; width of roadway, 7 ft. 6 in.; height of roadway from water, 120 ft.; clear span between rocks, 160 ft. This ingenious structure reflects very great credit upon Mr. Blackett, the designer; and not less upon its enterprising builder, Mr. Henry Handyside, who had, as will be seen from our description, no slight difficulties to contend with not the least of which was the high price of labour, which averaged from 10s. to 15s. per day for each man employed."



THE NEW ROMAN CATHOLIC CATHEDRAL AT YORK.

THE NEW ROMAN CATHOLIC CATHEDRAL, YORK.

We engrave this week an interior view of this church, the most important and sumptuous place of worship erected by the Roman Catholics in Great Britain. The site, though interesting from its historical associations, having anciently formed a portion of the establishment of St. Peter's Hospital, founded in the eleventh century, is so narrow and irregular in shape that it has tested the ingenuity of the architect, who has, however, succeeded in turning its peculiarities to the very best account, and giving a spacious and convenient plan, as well as an eminently successful structure. A spacious nave and choir, lateral aisles, a Lady Chapel, a tower rising to the height of 150 ft. and forming a baptistery, a chapter-house, and convenient vestries, afford all the requisite accommodation. The stone quarries of the county have been employed for the building, which is of the most substantial description. Both within and without there is a lavish yet judicious employment of sculpture. The interior fittings of every description are all carefully designed in keeping with the building, and not a single inconspicuous object offends the eye. Several windows are filled with fine stained glass, and the vaulted roof of the choir is richly illuminated. In the high altar, as shown in our Illustration, appear the several Patriarchs of the Old Law whose lives are typical of the Messiah, with four Athenian statues of the Evangelists. The sculpture was executed by Mr. Earp, of Lambeth. Mr. Wailes, of Newcastle, supplied the stained glass; Messrs. Fears and Jackson, of Holborn, the metal-work; Mr. Hayhall, of Sheffield, the wood carving; and Mr. Castell, of South Molton-street, the decorations. The general contractor was Mr. Weatherby, the Under Sheriff of York. The whole building, with its elaborate fittings and ornamentation, has been completed at the remarkably small cost of little more than £10,000—a fact which does almost as much credit to the architect, Mr. Goldie, of Gloucester-place, Portman-square, as the unusual merit and beauty of his design in all its parts.

THE GOVERNMENT HOUSE OF CANTERBURY PROVINCE, NEW ZEALAND.

An Engraving on this page represents the Government House at Christchurch, the capital of the province of Canterbury, New Zealand. Each province of that colony has its own Legislative Council, and its own Superintendent, elected by the people, to conduct the business of the Executive authority in the province; while the Governor, aided by a Legislative Council and a Parliament, or General Assembly, of delegates from the several provinces, presides over the colonial Administration at Auckland. The Middle Island, of which Canterbury, Nelson, and Otago form the chief component parts, has fortunately been exempt from those troubles with the Maori tribes by which the progress of other settlements in the North Island have been so much impeded. We are glad, however, to regard the submission of the Tauranga natives (of which we give an Illustration elsewhere) as an indication that the costly and inglorious conflict with the Maoris is now drawing to a close.

THE VISIT OF THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES TO DENMARK AND SWEDEN: THE ROYAL YACHT OSBORNE ILLUMINATED ON PRINCE OSCAR'S DEPARTURE FROM ELSINORE. FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES IN DENMARK.

THE sojourn of their Royal Highnesses in Denmark, since they returned from the excursion to Stockholm, has been so much of a private character, and amidst the scenes already made known to our readers, that little remains for our Special Artist to do in the way of illustrations. The only one to be published this week represents the brilliant display made by the Royal yacht in the harbour of Elsinore on Sunday evening, Oct. 9, in honour of Prince Oscar of Sweden, who crossed the Sound that day, from the Swedish to the Danish shore, to pay a visit for a few hours to the Royal party at Fredensborg Castle. He was accompanied by Princess Josephine, his wife. The weather was mild and warm, and stayed till half-past six. On their return to Elsinore, they were received by the authorities of the town and by a guard of honour of the 16th Regiment, which greatly distinguished itself during the late war. The Prince, accompanied by the Princess Sophia and the members of his suite, landed from the Royal carriages at the end of the quay, and, preceded by two torchbearers, walked to the vessel of the Royal Yacht Odense, the Princess having expressed a desire to see the interior of the vessel in which her husband travelled from Gottenburg with the members of the English Royal family. Captain Hansen, R.D.N., the commander, caused the gangway to be lighted up with large ships' lanterns, and burnt blue lights over the side, thereby illuminating the whole of the quay, and, so to speak, extinguishing the light of the torches, which before had looked very picturesque, advancing through the darkness at the head of the marching column. As the steamer Ophelia was to have almost immediately for Helsingborg there was not time for more than a hasty glance at the yacht; but the Princess seemed much gratified at all that was shown her, and conversed in excellent English with the principal officers. The Royal party were on the point of taking their departure, Prince Oscar was requested to add to his former kindness in Stockholm by giving a look back at the spot he rounded the point of the pier,' an invitation with which he readily undertook to comply. The Royal carriages conveyed the illustrious Swedish visitors from the side of the harbour nearest the Osborne to the opposite extremity, where the Ophelia lay, and here they were received as they went on board with presentation of arms by the guard of honour, the band performing some Swedish national airs. Most of the officers in command appeared to be known by name, and who stopped and spoke to them before following the Princess and her attendants on board. On leaving the yacht he was to have received the respectful salutations of the bystanders. When the presence of the silver-laced cap and towering plume of the running footmen upon the deck of the Ophelia announced that the Royal lady in whose service he was had taken up the position she desired to occupy on the voyage across the Cattegat, long, the steamer put out to sea, and in rounding the pier at the mouth of the harbour was very cordially cheered, Prince Oscar, from his known sympathies with the Scandinavian branch of the Royal family with a large proportion of the people of Denmark. At the same moment the display of rockets from the men-of-war in the roads assembly, who were not expecting anything of the kind, and simultaneously with the burst of illumination of the yacht's side and paddle-boxes became studded with blue lights. The night was for the season clear, and this dazzling line of fire and the lights in the cabin windows, reflected in the still water of the harbour, glowed and sparkled with double lines of brilliants. Half the beauty of the illumination lay in its sudden display and in the fact that it was not one of the expectations. The pier opposite the yacht was black with people, who came to witness the embarkation merely, and among them the gratified murmur of "Swedes." The popular excitement was extreme, and manifested by the sight of which gives pleasure, showed how well a lively nation appreciated the courtesy conveyed by the English to the head of the Swedish navy, and, probably, one of the most active thinkers in the Scandinavian. It is not expressing too much to say that winners, but they tied with 39 points each. On shooting off, one round each, No. 11 won, taking the cup, and No. 2 the prize. The winning competitors—Messrs. Heap, Noyes, Mitchell, Hough, and Crane, of No. 11 company, and Messrs. J. R. Butterworth, Windsor, Mr. Jones, Russell, and Murphy, of No. 2—then shot off at 200 yards. Colour-Sergeant Heap won the cup and Corporal Butterworth the rifle.

A number of influential gentlemen connected with the counties of Nottingh and Selkirk met recently in Melrose for the purpose of making arrangements for the organisation of a corps of Border mounted rifle volunteers. The matter was fully discussed, and a determination come to that every gentleman present should constitute himself a recruiting sergeant for the new corps, no doubt being entertained that its formation would meet with the hearty approval of the Government.

The Hon. James Gordon, brother of the Earl of Aberdeen, won the challenge medal of the Aberdeen Town and County Archery Club with a total of ninety-nine, the ranges being 400, 300, and 100 yards, ten shots at each. The Earl of Aberdeen was second, with a total of ninety-three. The competition took place at the Petterculn range.

Many of our riflemen, at the rifle contest recently held at Berwick, have been adjudged to be winners. The following are the names of the winners:—In the Hon. Artillery Company, Captain Field, two prizes, one for ball-practice and the other for rapid; Private Hopkinson, two prizes, one eye; Mr. Kerr, London Scottish, second best ball-practice; Captain Hunter, 19th Middlesex, first for ball-practice; Corporal Russell, of Ashford, the same; Lieutenant Burt, 1st Warwick, the same.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

THE DUKE OF NEWCASTLE.

His Grace Sir Henry Pelham Pelham-Clinton, K.G., P.C., fifth Duke of Newcastle-under-Lyne, in the county of Stafford, and Earl of Lincoln, Lord Warden of the Stannaries of Cornwall and Devon Shire, Lord Lieutenant and Master Forester of Sherwood Forest, Constable of Nottingham Castle, Sheriff of Sherwood Forest, and Keeper of St. Anne's Castle, was the only son of Henry, fourth Duke of Newcastle, K.G., by his wife Georgina Augusta Frederica, both daughter of Edward Miller Mundy, Esq., of Shipley, in the county of Derby. He was born, May 22, 1811, and received his earlier education at Eton, where he displayed considerable proficiency, more especially in the classical scholarship which bears the name of Newcastle. From Eton he went to Christ Church, Oxford, where he graduated in 1832; but before that year he took his seat in the Lower House as member for South Nottinghamshire. On the accession of Sir Robert Peel to the premiership in 1841 Lincoln, in 1851. He was a Lord of the Treasury from December, 1834, to April, 1835, and First Commissioner of Woods and Forests from September, 1841, to July, 1846. Less devoted than his father to extreme Toryism, Lord Lincoln, in 1846, changed his views on the subject of the corn laws, and decided to follow Sir Robert Peel in promoting their repeal. He was Secretary for Ireland from December, 1845, to February, 1846. His political career was but unimpeachable, and impressive. As Chief Commissioner of Woods and Forests he signalised himself by introducing, during 1845, a measure for the neglected clergy of the Forest of Dean and for the spiritual interests of 11,000 souls dependent on their daily labour or their contributions. As Chief Commissioner, rendered other various services of practical utility, such as the improvement of drainage, the widening of streets, the embellishment of Victoria Park, and the proposal of an embankment between Westminster and Battersea Bridges. He succeeded his father as fifth Duke of Newcastle on Jan. 12, 1851. In December, 1852, he accepted the post of Colonial and War Secretary (for both then were combined) in Lord Aberdeen's Ministry. When the Colonial was separated from the War Department, the Duke, in choosing the latter, was more delighted at the relief from the cares of office than at the honour. He might not make or remodel a whole vast disorganised system in face of the daily demands of the war. He resigned office in 1854. He was appointed governor of the Colonies in 1859, and held the office till ill health forced him, this year, to resign it. In 1859 the Duke of Newcastle went to Canada, the United States, and travel through her North American dominions with the Prince of Wales. The Royal visit distinguished itself by a great event in the North, namely, on the 10th of July; the particulars of the interesting journey were fully given in the pages of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. The Duke of Newcastle never married. Nov. 27, 1832, Lady Susan Harriet Catherine Hamilton Douglas, only daughter of Alexander, tenth Duke of Hamilton, had the honour to whom he was divorced in 1850, leaves four sons, and a daughter, Lady Susan Charlotte Catherine, married, April 23, 1860, to Lord Adolphus Vane Fitzgerald, M.P. for Southam, who died recently, and who was brother of Earl Vane. The Duke of Newcastle succeeds to the 8th inst. as Viscount Clumber, near Ollerton, Notts, and is succeeded by his eldest son, Henry Pelham, Earl of Lincoln, now sixth Duke of Newcastle and fifth Earl, born Dec. 15, 1843, and married, Feb. 11, 1861, Henrietta Adela, daughter of Henry Thomas Hope, M.P., of the Deepdene, Surrey, by whom he has only two daughters, a son and heir, just born. The Duke of Newcastle just deceased was a man of the highest honour and integrity, and reckoned as a most amiable disposition. His demise is much lamented by the public of whatsoever party or shade of opinion. Of the personal deceased there remain that of Clinton, Earls of Lincoln and Dukes of Newcastle, was the earliest ennobled. Their ancestor, Sir John de Clinton, was created Baron Clinton in 1299, now in abeyance as far back as 1299. John's descendant, the great Lord Admiral, Lord Clinton, K.G., was created Earl of Lincoln by Queen Elizabeth in 1572. His descendant, Henry, ninth Earl of Lincoln, was created Duke of Newcastle-under-Lyne by Charles I. in reward for fidelity, his wife's uncle, the celebrated statesman and Minister of the time of George II. and George III. The second Duke was great-grandfather of the Peer just dead.

LORD SOMERVILLE.

Peerage of Scotland, and an Admiral R.N., who died on the 19th inst., at Newbold Comyn, Leamington, where he had resided many years, was the grandson of James, thirteenth Lord Somerville, and was by his second wife, Mary, eldest daughter of the Hon. Wrichesley Long, by the third daughter of the Hon. Colonel Kenelm Somerville, who was himself born Nov. 14, 1787, and was educated at Rugby School. He entered the Royal Navy in 1801, and saw and shared in considerable active and honourable service. He attained the rank of Captain in 1814, and became an Admiral May 29, 1862. His Lordship succeeded his brother Mark, who died March 1, 1862. He married, Sept. 4, 1817, Frances Louisa, only daughter of John Hayman, Esq., and leaves two sons and five daughters. One of the latter, the Hon. Frances Somerville, is the wife of Captain Ralph Smith, eldest son of Robert Smith, Esq., of Graythrop, in the county of Montgomery. Lord Somerville is succeeded by his eldest son, Hugh, now eighteenth Lord Somerville, who was born Oct. 11, 1819, and is a Lieutenant in the Warwickshire Yeomanry Cavalry, and unmarried. Another, Frederick Neal, an officer in the Rifle Brigade, becomes heir-presumptive to the title. The family of Somerville and honourable Baronets of Dunsk, in Ireland, is very remote. It came from Normandy with the Conqueror, who made Sir Gualtier de Somerville son of the Lord of Somerville. The Irish Baronet's descendants settled in Lanarkshire at the end of the twelfth century, and the first Lord Somerville was Thomas, of Carnwath, who was created a Peer, by James I. of Scotland, in 1430. His descendant, Gilbert, the eighth Lord, entertained James VI. of Scotland and I. of England most sumptuously at his castle of Carnwath, lolling, for the purpose, a new and ten sheep every day; and the Scottish monarch was so much pleased that the place should not be called Cowkaudy, but "Cour-daily." The twelfth hospitality of this Peer, however, wasted the estates, and his successors were subsequently but poor until they obtained the reversion of the lands of their kinsman, William Somerville, Esq., of Kaidame, in the county of Warwick, and Somerville Abbey, in the county of Gloucester, the eminent poet, author of "The Chase." John, fifteenth Lord Somerville, introduced the breed of merino sheep from Lisbon into Great Britain. He was half-brother of the Peer just deceased.

SIR W. E. C. HARTOPP, BART.

Sir William Edmund Cradock-Hartopp, third Baronet, of Freathby, in the county of Leicester, whose lamented and unexpected death occurred on the 10th inst., at his seat, Four Oaks Park, Sutton Coldfield, Warwickshire, was the third son of Sir Edmund Cradock-Hartopp, who first inherited the baronetcy at the death of his wife, Anne Herlock, granddaughter and heiress of Sir John Herlock, Baronet of Ireland, on the first creation. He was born in 1797, and was educated at Eton, Westminster, and Trinity College, Cambridge. He served the office of High Sheriff of Warwickshire in 1838, and was a Deputy-Lieutenant and County Lieutenant for the counties of Leicester and Warwick. He was a Conservative, fervently attached to Church and Queen, and loyal to the throne. He succeeded his brother Sir Edmund Cradock-Hartopp, the second baronet, in 1842. He married, in 1833, Jane Mary, eldest daughter of Henry Mundahl Knight, Esq., by whom he leaves two sons and six daughters. By the latter, the eldest, Miss Cradock-Hartopp, is the wife of Edward Basil Jenkins, M.D., of Bath. The eldest son, Edmund Cradock-Hartopp, the fourth, Anne-Maria, is the wife of Lord Walter C. M. Douglas Scott, third son of the late Duke of Buccleuch. Sir William Cradock-Hartopp is succeeded by his eldest son, now Sir John William Cradock-Hartopp, who was born in 1833, and entered the Army in 1851, and served with the 17th Lancers in 1854, in the Crimean War. He became a Captain in 1854 and retired the following year, and is now Major in the first battalion of the Leicestershire volunteers. He married, May 14, 1859, Charlotte Frances, eldest daughter of the late Edward Giles Howard, Esq., nephew of Bernard Howard, fourth Duke of Norfolk. The Cavalier family of Hartopp, from which the late and present Baronets inherited, derived the first baronetcy conferred, in 1642, Edmund Bunney, Esq., on his marriage with the heiress of this house, changed his name to Cradock-Hartopp, and obtained the second baronetcy in 1796. He was father of the Baronet just deceased.

LADY BOSWELL.

This venerable lady, Dame Mary Boswell, was the daughter-in-law of James Boswell, Dr. Johnson's famous biographer, having been married, in 1791, to his son, Sir Alexander Boswell of Auchinleck, who died in a duel, in 1822, by James Stuart, Esq., of Dunearn, and who left issue by his marriage Sir James Boswell, Bart., present Laird of Auchinleck, and Margaret Theresa, widow of Sir William Francis Kniet, seventh Baronet, of Stoke, in the county of Buckingham, and Margaret, married to Captain Gore Langton. Lady Boswell, was the daughter of Thomas Cumming, Esq., of Edinburgh, Her Ladyship died at Auchinleck House, on the 10th inst., in her 94th year. The honoured and eminent house of Boswell of Auchinleck is now represented in the male line by Sir James Alexander Currie Boswell, Bart., of Auchinleck, but it is to be regretted that the baronetcy has almost entirely passed away, the widow of the last Baronet, Jessie Jane, Lady Boswell, being the sole person still bearing the title.

VICE-ADMIRAL H. F. GREVILLE, C.B.

Henry Francis Greville, C.B., Vice-Admiral of the Blue, who died on the 18th inst., after a long illness, at his residence, Cannon Hill, near Maidenhead, was the youngest son of the second and brother of the third Baron Greville, by his first wife, Catherine, second daughter of Sir Bellingham Graham, Bart., of Norton Conyers, Yorkshire. He was born in 1794, became Captain R. C. Durham, and next joined the Arethusa, in which ship, so midshipman Pasmore naively observed, "I commenced my career as a midshipman, where in a boat affair he was shot through the leg." He afterwards joined the Leander, Admiral de Courcy's flagship, on the North American station, and saw service on the Boulogne and North American stations, having the command of the Leander in 1840, when Napoleon was brought from St. Helena by Sir John B. Warren. When acting-lieutenant of the Woolwich he was knighted on board the Leander, by the Duke of Clarence, in November, 1819. In 1817 he held the office of private secretary to Viscount Melville, First Lord of the Admiralty, and commanded the Leander, in 1841, appointed to the command of the Trafalgar, 120, on the Mediterranean station, and in 1844 to the Queen, 104, on the North Russia. For his gallant services he was made a C.B., and by the Emperor Nicholas was given the order of St. Stanislaus, and that of the Medjidie third class. He became a Captain in 1832; Rear-admiral in 1856; Vice-Admiral in 1863. He was M.P. for Dover from 1832 to 1835, and again in 1836, Harwich, only child of General Shepard, and by her, who died 1857, had issue Sir Henry Greville, Bart., and two daughters, one of whom died young. The other two are married—viz., Emma Maria, wife of Lord Algernon Lennox, and Mary Ann, wife of Lord Arthur Hay, brother of the Marquis of Tweeddale.

PROFESSOR CHARLES CHRISTIAN RAFN, D.L., OF COPENHAGEN.

The learned antiquary, Professor C. C. Rafn, died at Copenhagen on the 20th inst., in the seventy-seventh year of his age. He was born at Odense, 1795, in Fyen, and when at Odense Cathedral school he began to develop a strong taste for the study of northern antiquities. In 1813 he was in the first an appointment at the University library at Copenhagen, which contains a magnificent collection of Icelandic manuscripts, and subsequently became, as the so-called "Arna Magnæan Legacy," of which manuscripts he made a complete catalogue. In 1821 he published, conjointly with Finn Magnusen, the edition of "Grants' Stories of the North," after Icelandic manuscripts; and in 1823 he published the first volume of his "Antiquitates Americanæ," or the literature of the North; and to publish, with comments, the very curious Icelandic manuscript, entitled "Grænlands Historiske Mindesmærker," a work of which he has since 1845 received greater importance and renown as the "Royal Society of the Antiquaries of the North," which has been under the patronage of the Kings of Denmark, and has counted, as honorary or ordinary members, Jacob Grimm, Sir Frederick Madden, Professor Worsaae, and Mr. Prescott. Professor Rafn was permanent secretary to the society, and all the works' nearly 100 number of which have been published, were under the direction of the principal book, which he made him most known, was his "Antiquitates Americanæ," or the literature of the Icelandic manuscripts, and the monumental data, and from the old Icelandic manuscripts, that America had been discovered and colonised by Icelanders. The work was in Latin, and the contents repeatedly during the eleventh to the fourteenth century. Professor Rafn was a member of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Berlin, and a Commander of the Order of Dannebrog, and of several foreign orders of knighthood.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will of General Sir Robert William Gardiner, G.C.B., K.C.H., of Melbourne Lodge, Claremont, Esher, and of Gun House, St. James's Park, was proved on the 14th inst., the executors therein appointed being Major-General Henry Foster, R.A., and Colonel John Gardiner, C.B., brother of the deceased. Robert was for many years Royal Artillery, had served gallantly in the Peninsula and at Waterloo, and was Lieutenant-Governor of Gibraltar, and died in that office at the age of eighty-two. He will, dated 1857, and a codicil, 1858, are entirely in his own handwriting, and are written in a clear, distinct, and beautiful hand. The testator has disposed of his estates in England and Australia amongst his son and daughters, according to the Australian Settlement Act, by land and by money, in South Australia, including gun and mining shares in that colony, as well as property in Gloucestershire, Surrey, and Middlesex, and his residence. The testator has devised his freeholds in Westmoreland; to his daughter Sophia H. Cator for life, with remainder to her children. The testator has bequeathed to his wife the leasehold messuage, No. 1, Victoria Terrace, Curzon Street, May Fair, and his furniture, plate, pictures, and wines, and £2000 free of legacy duty. To each of his executors £200; to his servants two years' wages, and to an old servant, Mary Ann Chandler Bennett, an annuity of £10, in addition to a former provision.

The will of William Lowndes, Esq., of The Bury, Chesham, Bucks, was proved in London by the executors—namely, Mrs. Martha Lowndes (the relict) and the Rev. Charles Lowndes, M.A. (the brother). The personal estate was sworn under £140,000, and the real estate of a considerable freehold property. The will was made in 1854, and twice married. There are certain entailed estates in Middlesex, Kent, Hertford, and Bucks, which go to the eldest son, Charles Lowndes, Esq., of Winslow Hall, Bucks, with a jointure of £1000 a year for his relict, to whom an immediate legacy of £2000 is bequeathed. The estates are further charged with the sum of £20,000 for the issue of the second marriage. The residue of the personal property is to be equally divided amongst all the children.

We learn from a South Australian paper that kangaroos are increasing to such an extent throughout Australia as seriously to interfere with the feed upon sheep-runs.

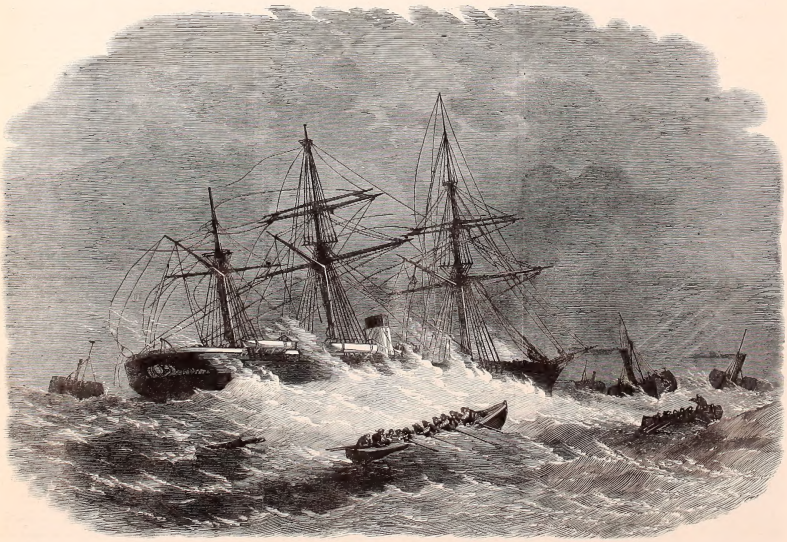
The Queen of Portugal having completed her seventeenth year last week, there was a grand reception at Lisbon on the occasion, and the city was brilliantly illuminated. In the evening their Majesties witnessed the performance of "Rapsho" at the San Carlos Theatre. On their entrance the orchestra played the Hymn of the Charter, and again at their departure.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Does not everyone who has been to Portsmouth remember with pride the old Victory, now the Admiral's flag-ship, lying in the harbour there in grand state, and with the brass on its deck which marks the spot where the "immortal Nelson fell" and the cockpit where he died. As time rolls on this relic becomes more and more of a fossil and forgotten one. We grow ashamed, in this age of progress, of our old victories; and, since the close of the Waterloo banquet, have determined, like the proverbial Turks the Second's days, who tried to hide eternal punishment, not to mention these things to ears polite, lest our neighbours should hear their feelings hurt. Wooden Bridge and Trafalgar-square were to be renamed and all the old glorious Peninsula battles were to be expunged from the flags of the "fighting fiftieth" and other regiments. Hey-day! our veterans will not grow up in shame of seeing any of them alive when we do so. On the 31st of this month, while our sailors are getting off in the backwoods for the country edition, and sight was seen at Portsmouth, on board the Victory. It was the Trafalgar fleet, all in full dress uniform with laurels on her main and fore top, as a dead thing which rejoiced at a glad supper—and dancing—to their former guests; who used to feel well upon that day—a day on which they fought—were invited to the feast. Only one came; the last Trafalgar hero crawled up the ship's side and died within her. How he got down, dressed in their clean decks, and with their hair plastered so neatly, as Jack's hair always is, must have stared at this relic of the past; and how the boy's heart within the old man must have been idly stirred as he sat solus at a board which formerly so many present, and the last leaf of an old tree still hangs on and trembles on the branches; in a few months perhaps, the winter blasts will take it away for ever.

A contemporary tells us that a wrong report is abroad concerning Mr. Sala's book on America, which is promised us at the end of the year. This we must contradict at the same time you have informed, and it is that the book would consist of a revised, expurgated, and annotated edition of his excellent letters to our correspondent. Faultless and bold as these letters are, detailing immediate impressions with a photographic fidelity, we should have been glad to have seen them reprinted; but we are told that the work is to be published in December next, entirely new, some of the matter of the author's letters being only introduced in foot-notes.

"He makes a solitude, and calls it peace," is a good rendering of a Latin quotation which has passed into a proverb. All conquerors have liked to do so—and then, by-the-by, history some more wantonly and effectually than General Sheridan—who we hope is not a fair specimen of our Republican friends. General Richard Brinsley—who has swept the smiling Shenandoah Valley as bare as a flight of locusts has swept the land—tells us that the country between the Blue Ridge and North Mountains, he reports, is devastated; two thousand barns, seventy mills, hay, flour, burning implements, and meal are all gone! In addition to the shooting—"horses we are not told—of a non-commissioned engineer, he burst all the dwellings within a mile and a half of Newtown, he tells us, "to the last house-warment," cries the epitaph of Wren, "look around you!" The spirit of engineer Meigs may repeat the sentence without variation; and this we are told, is war. Some people would be better from our remarks that the starving millions of England could be fed by the valley of the Shenandoah alone. Such is not the case, though it is a fine Switzerland-ing—nay, rather because of—this, the tide of victory seems to ebb on the Confederate side, and we greatly commend Sheridan to the Confederate side of that deep and dangerous channel which separates the two. Money goes up in value, and the hearts of people are troubled—and no wonder—when the best news we have from the American continent is that the Confederation—the Canadians are particular in their pronunciation of the word—is behaving quickly, silently, and safely on; and that the whole of British America is ready, resolved, and prepared, and not at all dismayed at the promise of an invasion so often held out to terrify us from the throne of New England or the drab-coated men of Pennsylvania. We all feel that here the Confederates have met their match, and that after many shots, and one, too, which, if many regret, all will own was inevitable.



If anyone turns up in the course of the week at the "Asylum Oyscle," published by one Panton, a bookseller, an ingenious but not ingenuous gentleman, he will have the satisfaction of finding that our great-grandfathers were not the great fools we take them. At the time when the Rev. Stephen Charnock, B.D., held the place of corresponding to the Royal Society—that is, in popular style—and when the Rev. Mr. John Flavel, Minister of Dartmouth, might be considered as a prodigy of art, or C. H. Spurgeon; when the "Compleat History of Europe," truer than hitherto or since, and by several eminent hands," occupied the place of that by Sir Archibald Alison; when the "Compleat Body of Husbandry" and "Gentleman's Recreation of fruits," was done, not by Mr. Lenny, but M. de la Quintaye, then did the "Athenian Oracle" tell us "whether spirit doctrine could be touched," "how big spirits were," and "how they became visible." It is true that Mr. Panton, Newport Market spirits very visible, and that a gentleman pretty well known in literature, chosen as a committee-man, did on Friday last take hold of the "spirit" hand and struggle with it for "spirit" power, but it was not withdrawn from the doorhole of the "structure" or cabinet. It is true, too, that he came forward to tell us that the spirit of the lecturer descended on his hand as one of very strong and muscular flesh and blood, hot, damp with perspiration, and most undoubtedly, so far as he could judge by touch, one of the hands of Mr. Foster, the lecturer, who was tied and fast in the structure. The gentleman's veracity is beyond doubt; and, although the spiritualists amongst the Asylum Oyscle gentlemen were there thought his testimony insufficient, the lecturer, Mr. Fergusson, immediately accepted it by declaring that the entire belief in the life of his being a Davenport hand, adding that "he had seen the brothers duplicated in every limb, and in every member and feature." Thus he trumped higher than the gentleman, and if the latter's evidence swallowed that, they would digest anything. Let us add that in all the séances the most positive assertions were made "on the contrary, and that the phenomena, occurring in the dark—i.e., the music and touchings in circle—are as yet unexplained. The little job in the cabinet may be as much relegated to very clever juggling.

But the spirits are divided against themselves. At Mrs. Marshall's they declare that the spirits are not mediums, but intermediates, and at the same time tell us that Lincoln will be President, and that Mr. Miller, whose "Life" is now in course of publication, would next frequent "Echo" to be heard, will be found guilty and executed, but not before he confesses his crime and points out his accomplice. Excellent spirits! Mr. Miller will probably say "on the other side," they are extremely probable. In the mean time a very great many reasonable persons listen with pity to the divinations of spirits, the utterances of these oracles, and, therefore, all that can be done to unchain and uncover them covers others.

Foremost in the field, and embracing the chance of an excellent opportunity for advertisement, Professor Anderson, who gave a "private" audience to a vast crowd of people, and who, in the persons of a Mr. Sutton and Miss Lizzie Anderson, fully exhibited the power, which anyone who chooses may acquire, of dislocating the joints of our any amount of knotted cord. About sixty yards were provided in one instance, but a quarter of that length was quite sufficient for Dr. Wakley, of the Lancet, and another gentleman, the tie was so effectual that the performer could not escape. So far in favour of the spirits. The rest was all spirits of wine, and a blue one in all drawing-rooms. Any little, strong boy of fifteen may acquire it after a few hours' practice. Miss Anderson told the present writer that she found it out herself. Plenty of rope should be given; for, if a yard will stretch two inches, twenty yards will, according to Cocker, stretch forty inches. The performer should stand straight up, like a soldier at "attention;" he should expand his body and fill out as much as he can; then, when fully bound, he should contract and get into the smallest space possible, and if his wrists be small he will find it well to fill his clothes to get rid of a cord twenty yards or feet long, and about as thick as those with which we cord our trunks for a railway journey. The newer the cord, perhaps, the better.

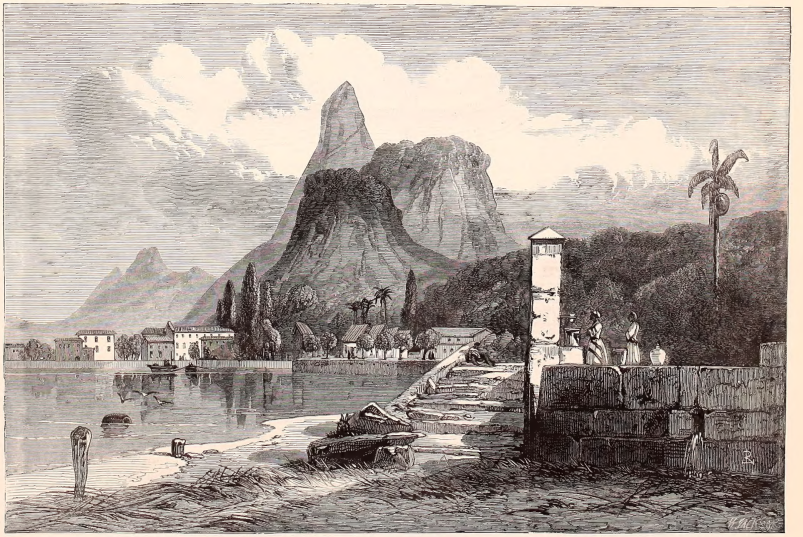
THE PORT AND CITY OF RIO DE JANEIRO.



VIEWS OF RIO DE JANEIRO.

The Alto do Imperador, or Hill of the Emperor (from which the first of the two Views we have engraved for this Number was taken), is about 3000 ft. high, and commands, as our readers will see, a very fine prospect over the Bay of Rio de Janeiro. The Rio and Petropolis Railway passes through the low ground in the middle distance; and Mauá, the railway terminus and little port where the steamers touch to take in their passengers for Rio, should be nearly opposite the end of the long island on the near side of the bay. On the further side is the city of Rio de Janeiro, running along the coast to the foot of the distant mountains on the right; and beyond this again is the entrance to the bay and to the Atlantic Ocean.

Our second Illustration is a view of the shores of Botafogo Bay, which is a beautiful little inlet forming the southern extremity of the bay of Rio de Janeiro. It is surrounded entirely by the hills, and its waters are on a fine day as smooth as those of a lake, and as blue as the Mediterranean. The city of Rio is about three miles distant; but from the centre of the city a continuous line of suburbs stretches both ways for a distance of four or five miles along the coast; and Botafogo Bay is lined with pretty villas, most of them standing alone in the midst of little groves of oranges and mangoes. The mountain in the centre of our View is called the Corcovado, and is the highest hill in the immediate vicinity of Rio, being about 2000 ft. high. It is very easy of ascent on one side, and almost perpendicular on the other. The view from its summit is perhaps one of the finest in the world. In the foreground is a flight of rough stone steps, leading down to the beach, with a fountain, to which black maid-servants resort to fetch water and to gossip over the events of the day.

THE NORTH LONDON WORKING MEN'S INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.

This interesting Exhibition, the opening of which by Earl Russell was reported in our last week's Paper, has continued to attract a daily crowd of visitors to the Agricultural Hall at Islington. In presenting an Illustration of the scene on Monday week, at the time when his Lordship made a personal inspection of the stalls, we may recall the words in which he declared the working classes of London to be, in his belief "superior to any other working people in the world;" and expressed "the highest admiration of their industry, skill, and ingenuity, so many beautiful proofs of which are to be seen in this collection." It may be remarked that the objects here exhibited are divided into two parts—the products of workmen who have sent specimens of their skill and ingenuity in the trade by which they live, and products of amateurs. Respecting the latter, the committee have thought it necessary to offer some explanation. They say:—"An artisan seldom chooses as a recreation that branch of industry of which his daily occupation consists. If actively or laboriously employed during the day, drawing, painting, or model-making is generally practised to occupy his leisure hours; while he who follows a sedentary occupation almost invariably resorts to some more active method of utilising his spare time. The remarkable proficiency attained by many exhibitors in amateur workmanship cannot fail to afford encouragement to others who may visit the exhibition, and thus fulfil one of the chief aims of the promoters of the undertaking." This is true to a certain extent; but, with a view to the prosperity of our national trade and manufactures, we are no less gratified with that part of the exhibition which proves that there is a great deal of talent amongst our mechanics in their own particular trade.

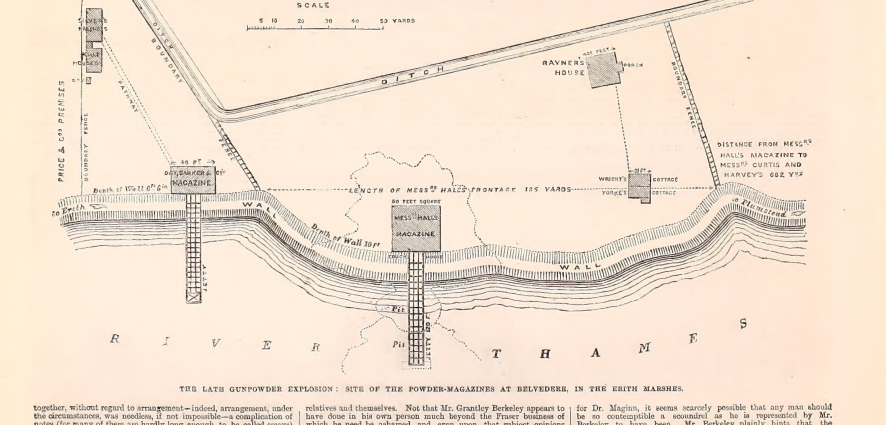
THE EXPLOSION OF POWDER-MAGAZINES AT BELVEDERE, NEAR ERITH.



We have engraved a Plan of the site of the gunpowder-magazines which blew up on Saturday morning, the 1st inst. This plan was drawn from an actual survey by Mr. H. W. Marriner, of the Edith Academy, for the inspection of the Coroner's jury at the adjourned inquest. It requires little explanation. The magazine of Messrs. John Hall and Co. was 50ft. square, with 10ft. perpendicular depth of wall. That of the Low Wood Company, otherwise Messrs. Dry and Barker's, was 28ft. wide by 48ft. long; depth of wall, 6ft. 6in. The length of frontage belonging to the former was 165 yards, and to the latter sixty-four yards. The distance from the one magazine to the other was sixty-four yards. The distance from the Low Wood Company's magazine to the house of their foreman, Silver, was but fifty yards; while Rayner, the storekeeper of Messrs. Hall, had his dwelling seventy-one yards from their magazine: but the cottages of Wright and York were only sixty-seven yards from it. The jetty projecting from Messrs. Hall's magazine into the river was 122ft. in length. The nearest powder-magazine to those at Belvedere was that of Messrs. Curtis and Harvey, which was 682 yards from Messrs. Hall's. The scene of the explosion was 1300 yards from Erith Church and 1500 yards from the gasworks.

THE STEAM-SHIP ONTARIO AGROUND ON HASBOROUGH SANDS, NEAR YARMOUTH.

OUR Engraving, from a sketch by Mr. W. E. Hunt, of Great Yarmouth, shows the position of the Ontario when she had struck on Hasborough Sands, as mentioned last week. This fine screw-steamer, of 3290 tons, belonging to the National Steam Navigation Company, was intended for the Liverpool and New York trade; but was, at the time of her disaster, making a first voyage from Shields to Alexandria, laden with coals and iron. It was on the morning of Sunday week that she got aground, about ten miles from the shore. Captain Brooklin and the crew did not leave the vessel till the Friday, when small hope of saving her remained. For some days, however, as the weather permitted, she was attended by the Caistor life-boat, the steamer Rainbow, and several tugs, which were employed to remove as much of her cargo as could be taken away. Several boats and small vessels thus engaged appear in our Illustration.

The Royal Malta Artillery Regiment has presented a piece of plate to Lady Le Marchant, and a very handsome and complimentary address to the Governor, Sir John Gaspard Le Marchant.

The Postmaster-General has issued an order, in which he states that, several instances having lately occurred in which newspapers sent from this country to Russia have been returned in consequence of the regulations of the Russian Post Office with regard to the transmission of newspapers not having been stamped with the police or again informed that it is forbidden to introduce into Russia, through the post, political newspapers, and that the only means by which persons residing in Russia can obtain such newspapers from the United Kingdom is by subscribing for them at one of the Russian post-offices. The admission into Russia of newspapers not of a political character is only permitted in those cases where they are addressed to the houses of some established bookseller.

THE LATE GUNPOWDER EXPLOSION: SITE OF THE POWDER-MAGAZINES AT BELVEDERE, IN THE ERITH MARSHES.

THE LATE GRANTLEY F. BERKELEY.

THE death of this gentleman, which occurred on the 1st inst., at his residence, Wymondham Hall, Leicestershire, has been followed by a crop of rumours and reports, which, if they do not absolutely contradict each other, are at least very far from agreeing. Mr. Grantley Berkeley was a man who, during his long life, had made himself conspicuous in many ways, and who, in consequence, had left behind him a very mixed reputation. Some people, and those not a few, regarded him as a man of genius, and as a martyr to the prejudices of society; others, and those the majority, looked upon him as a man of eccentricity, and as a martyr to his own vanity. Whether he was a genius or not, he was certainly a man of very considerable talent, and of a talent which, if it had been properly directed, might have made him famous in literature. Whether he was a martyr or not, he was certainly a man who, by his own conduct, made himself a mark for the shafts of ridicule and satire. Mr. Grantley Berkeley was the younger son of the late Admiral Sir William Berkeley, and was born in 1800. He was educated at Eton, and entered the army in 1819, as cornet in the 10th Hussars. He served in the Peninsula, and was present at the battle of Waterloo. He left the army in 1824, and married in the following year Miss Elizabeth Craven, daughter of Mr. Craven, of Ufton Court, Berks. Mr. Berkeley's life, from the time of his marriage, was a very chequered one. He was a man of considerable literary power, and he wrote a number of books, which, if they did not always please the public, were at least sure to attract its attention. He was also a man of very considerable wealth, and he spent his money in a very lavish manner. He was a great sportsman, and kept a large number of hounds, and was a liberal patron of the turf. He was also a man of very considerable personal courage, and was ready to fight a duel with any one who offended him. He was, moreover, a man of very strong political opinions, and was a Radical of the most pronounced type. He was a great admirer of the French Emperor, and was a strong opponent of the Corn Laws. He was also a strong opponent of the Game Laws, and was a great advocate for the abolition of capital punishment. He was a man of very strong religious opinions, and was a Roman Catholic. He was also a man of very strong moral opinions, and was a strong opponent of the vices of society. He was a man of very strong social opinions, and was a strong opponent of the evils of society. He was a man of very strong political opinions, and was a strong opponent of the evils of society. He was a man of very strong religious opinions, and was a strong opponent of the evils of society. Jonathan at Home. By Captain Horace P. Batchelor. (1 vol. W. F. Blackburn.) Captain Batchelor paid a visit last year to America, and on his return, at the commencement of 1864, took up his pen to have what he calls "a stray shot at the Yankees." He sincerely hopes he will not hurt anybody, and we think he may make himself quite easy on that score; for he does not appear to have much to say which has not been said before with certainly greater bitterness, if not with greater justice, with greater terseness, and with greater elegance. He saw much that he did not like, and much that he did like; and his choice between North and South is rather difficult to determine, inasmuch as he says, "I think this war has been sent as a judgment upon both." In his impartiality seem to tend towards the South. For, though he says "the South must yield at last," he also says in another place, "I think it a pity that we have not recognised the disabused Union conceited egotists (i.e. the Northerners) of the idea, and given our aid to the brave South in its distress."

Memoir of the Life and Character of the Rev. Thomas Raffles, D.D., LL.D. By Thomas Stamford Raffles, Esq., B.A. (Jackson, Walford, and Hodder, Paternoster Row.) The late Dr. Raffles was one of the remarkable men of his age. His powerful eloquence as a preacher and his perfect life as a Christian minister are evidenced by the successful exercise of his sacred calling for half a century at Liverpool, and the approbation and affection of all parties in that large and important town. His generous sympathies and wide attractions of visitors to the place, and his acquaintance was sought by many men of note, even including princes of the blood. Dr. Raffles, however, was not distinguished only as a clergyman; he was a poet, an essayist and general writer, a virtuoso, and a wit. His social qualifications made his house at Edgehill, and his house at Edgehill. To his son, the respected stipendiary magistrate of Liverpool, this biography must have been a labour of love; and in that spirit he has carefully executed it. He has put the whole well together, connecting the various masterly and agreeable letters and other materials left by his father in a plain and sensibly-written narrative, whose obviously subdued tone contrasts admirably with the brilliant subject to the pen of the subject of his biography. His book is a most readable production, and few who take it up will lay it down again without going through it. But the work deserves thorough perusal, on less casual and weightier grounds, for it affords a superb example of how, in the same good man, may be united kindest and absolute piety with all the amenities and elegancies of literary and social existence.

Canada in 1864. By F. N. N. Cheshyre, late R.N. (1 vol. Simpson Low, Son, and Marston.) A hand-book for settlers in Canada, it contains within a small compass everything of any consequence to the country," and is likely to be extremely useful "to those whose thoughts are bent on emigration to Canada." The first chapter contains the reason for writing "thither; but limited space compels us to refer the curious to the book itself for information as to what those reasons are. Some of them are "the annexation," "the institutions," and "its prospects," annexation to the United States not included.

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

On the 15th Venus sets at 5h. 30m. p.m.; Mars (in Taurus) passes the meridian at 10h. 56m. a.m.; Saturn (in Virgo) passes the meridian at 9h. 56m. a.m.; and Uranus (in Taurus) passes the meridian at 7h. 12m. a.m. Wet Moon's changes are—First Quarter on Nov. 6, at 11h. 33m. p.m.; Full Moon, Nov. 13, at 5h. 35m. p.m.; Last Quarter, Nov. 21, at 7h. 17m. a.m.; and New Moon, Nov. 29, at 7h. 17m. a.m. The constellations Perseus and Ariduane will be on the meridian at midnight, about the middle of the month.

THE NOVEMBER STAR SHOWERS.—Mr. H. Newton has communicated to the American Journal of Science the printing of original accounts, in various languages, of the displays in former times of what may be considered the precursors of the present exhibition of shooting stars on the morning of Nov. 13, 1833, which afford data for the determination of the length of the annual period, and the eighty-three year cycle. That the latter, he says, "additional arguments (if such arguments are needed) for the theory he has offered, that the stars are small bodies revolving about the sun like the orbit, until they come into the earth's atmosphere, where they burn for an instant and are dissipated into gaseous dust. They show that the times during which the swarm of bodies furnishing the November meteors revolves about the sun must be limited to one or two thousand consecutive periods, one of which is more probable than the others. They will serve to direct future observation, and enable us to verify or correct any conclusions we have been or may be presented." M. Baillaud, in commenting on Mr. Newton's conclusions, says that the probability of the return of the great November shooting stars may be preceded or followed by a cloud of dust excessively rare, which, under the influence of the magnetic pole, may give rise to an aurora borealis.

METEOR.—M. Bernard, in a letter read at a meeting of the Academy of Sciences, stated that on Sept. 24, when he was returning from Geneon, not far from Limoges, a little before noon, he perceived a meteor in the direction of the sun, which was then 30° above the horizon. It appeared about the two ends, descending with a slight inclination to the west. In another letter, M. J. de Lamezan informs that at the same hour, at Lons-le-Saulnier, at the Lons-le-Saulnier, at the same hour, at the same time, he heard a sound resembling prolonged thunder, the sky being very serene. Different evidence of the meteor went out immediately, and found several persons examining a little cloud which was passing slowly over the zenith, from north to west, and which perceived a ray resembling lightning. No doubt the thundering in a clear sky resulted from the meteorite on the point of bursting.

SOME METEORIC PHENOMENA are described by M. Lespiault in a letter read at a recent meeting of the Academy of Sciences, Paris. On the 24th of September last, about twenty minutes after midday, he was with his brother in the vine-grounds near Nerac, Lot-et-Garonne, when a sudden clap of thunder, and the air calm, suddenly they heard a detonation resembling that produced by the explosion of a rifle-shot, which was followed by a long rolling, like that of thunder or of an approaching vehicle. The sound filled the air shortening them and did not cease for a few seconds in the same direction. It continued for about thirty seconds, then became feeble, and then returned to the first intensity; the total duration being about a minute. The same noise was perceived in the neighbourhood at a distance between a mile and a mile and a half.

ELECTRIC POLARITY.—Some new facts relating to this subject have been noted by M. Volpicelli, and reported by him to the Academy of Sciences at Turin. He says:—"Two pieces of platinum immersed in a vessel of water with protoxide of iron precipitated by placed isolated over a dry spot, and connected by a wire, the one with the zinc and the other with the copper of a well-known active electric pile, if the previously isolated, it will manifest negative electricity. I have also proved that parallel, horizontal lightly with iron filings, give positive electricity to the one placed above, and delicately it manifests negative electricity. These two facts contain the existence of molecular polarity in the substances pendent on the action of the energetic tetch. Faraday, mixed with Seebeck's amalgam, increases the electric tension of machines. I have also demonstrated that there is most absolutely remove the shelter placed between the two plates of the condenser, and replace it by a partially perforated white silk, more or less, according to the circumstances of the case."

THE ELECTRIC CURRENTS OF THE EARTH.—M. Matteucci, in a recent memoir, has reported to the Academy at Paris the continuation of researches on the relations which may exist between these currents and atmospheric electricity, and also his verification of the general conclusions to be the study of the currents upon lines whose extremities were plunged into the earth at different points. Our readers will remember a recent paper on this subject made of experimenting. &c. He reports the results which he obtained by operating on telegraphic lines of great length, the wires of which terminated in the earth at points of level. The electric currents obtained in spite of the most careful precautions, were more frequent and more energetic than those observed in previous experiments on a hill near Turin. He has also observed currents in the wires of the telegraph lines, which were directed in a plane perpendicular to the meridian; so that the precaution was taken to avoid the influence of the earth currents. He has ascertained that the currents were more frequent and more energetic when the wires were directed in a plane perpendicular to the meridian than when they were directed in the plane of the meridian. He has also observed that the currents were more frequent and more energetic when the wires were directed in a plane perpendicular to the meridian than when they were directed in the plane of the meridian. He has also observed that the currents were more frequent and more energetic when the wires were directed in a plane perpendicular to the meridian than when they were directed in the plane of the meridian.

HUDDERSFIELD CHESS CLUB.—This flourishing society held its opening meeting for the season on Tuesday last. The proceedings comprised the president and vice-president of the club, D. Marsden, Esq., and A. A. Cooper, Esq., both of Huddersfield, in the chair, the latter acting as a goodly sprinkling of amateurs from the town and county. The secretary, among other matters of business announced that he had commenced the receipt of a challenge to a match from the Chess Club of Bradford, and a challenge also to a match from the Chess Club of Leeds, and Huddersfield had determined to accept. This announcement was well received; and, as each of the three clubs can boast of some good players, we shall be disappointed if the matches do not produce a few excellent games.

FRENCH CHESS MAGAZINES.—We mentioned a few weeks since that the Nouvelle Régence was withdrawn from circulation, to be superseded by a publication which would combine with its information the pages of the Palamède, which was also to be withdrawn from circulation. We have now before us the first periodical may be obtained, as a fair sample of those numbers which are to follow. The first number, we regret to say, is by no means worthy of the high character of its predecessor and that of the Régence of Kieseritzky. The paper and typography are excellent, and the general "getting up" is much in advance of the Nouvelle Régence. The contents, too, are more varied and more interesting than those we have latterly been in the habit of perusing in the defunct magazine. Among them we more particularly noticed an article on the laws of chess at present in use in France, condemning, of course, the absurd innovations which a small clique are vainly endeavouring to force down the throats of English players; some subtleties games by Rejetchenski, Breyfidzki, Kolisch, &c., and a number of excellent chess problems by Bayer, Lamouroux, Lespinasse, and Mesmacker. The department dedicated to editor gossip has articles on billiards and whist, upon the merits of which we will not pretend to enter further than to say, that, like the chess, they are well conducted and lastly contemplated. The Palamède Française is to be published on the 1st of each month, at Ch. Lavaux, Rue de Rivoles, Paris, and can be obtained of any foreign bookseller in London two days afterwards.

COLUMN FOR THE CURIOUS.

THE Royal Literary Fund Society, refilled since 1860 in Adelphi-terrace, in the house formerly Garrick's, possesses a few presents of historic and literary interest. An acquisition of the latter character recently made is the plaster cast taken by Mr. Cruikshank, the eminent surgeon of the time, from the face and head of Dr. Johnson after death. The Doctor and Cruikshank were personal friends, and the cast is well authenticated by Mr. Hutchins, of Hanover-square. It is remarkable as differing in several respects from the received portraits of Johnson. His death is thus described:—His difficulty of breathing increased till about seven o'clock in the evening, when Mrs. Desmoulins, who was sitting in the room, observing that the noise made in breathing had ceased, went to the bed and found he was dead! Sir John Hawkins says that a quarter of an hour he had, without a groan or the least sign of pain or uneasiness, yielded his last breath. "We were all in tears," says Mrs. Hoole, "and there saw the most awful sight of Dr. Johnson laid out in his bed, without life." Thus died Dr. Johnson, physically tranquil, as one going off into a placid slumber.

A considerable number of cults, or flint flakes, has just been picked up on the Common, near Guildhall, in the field to be from the surface of some newly broken up land, formerly heath, in the neighbourhood of Hastings and Battle, and in some parts of Kent, as well as in the Isle of Wight, the worst Manor, the estate of Mr. Louis Huth). They were found single, as if they had been dropped about, and lay hidden until they were brought to sight by the land having been cleared and ploughed a few years since. Their shape is evidently artificial, and they resemble exactly those found in other with sharp edges. Many may be called knives, as well as they seem designed for cutting; some are wedge-shaped; others are in the form of spear or arrow heads, sharp pointed, and apparently designed for mounting on the ends of sticks; and one has a finely-serrated edge. The material is white coal or clay, naturally without a stone in it resembling these flints, which belongs to the chalk formation. Some of the flints have a distinct circle or bulb on them.

Guildhall, with its spick-and-span new roof, and the show roofs strewed with gravel and sand, are the promised novelties for, in civic parlance, "The Ninth." Others are in agitation. The Banquet Consultant Committee are importuned for a reform in the mode of serving the inauguration dinner in Guildhall, by serving it up in courses of eight—say, two turtle and another soups, turbot and another fish, two entrées—the venison and roast beef, the sweets and the set—"stock to dinner in Guildhall, and multiply the dinners by the parties of eight invited." This, the writer tells us, in a letter to The Times, was the plan adopted at the Hôtel de Ville at Paris, where he dined with 600 persons, when "every guest obtained a first-rate dinner, of excellent wine and cookery, and was admirably served." He sooner had this suggestion appeared as taken from the Hôtel de Ville than another correspondent described the plan as adopted at his suggestion at the dinner given by Mr. Peto to nearly 600 men at Willis's Rooms, in 1862. The same dinner, dish by dish, was served to each party of eight, and as few waiters attended, and no more alone. Another suggestion by this correspondent is that each table of eight should be in the form of a double crescent, joined by a narrow slip to those on each side. According to the writer, this mode of serving a great dinner has been adopted in China for centuries past. And, we must add, in the city of London, as mentioned above, at that minute reporter, Peyps, relates:—

Oct. 29, 1663.—Dined and up and down to see the tables, where under every nut there was a bill of fare, and at the end of the table the persons proper for the table. In the middle, but above all, was the table for the Mayor's and the Lords of the Privy Council that had napkins or knives, which were very few at the table. The Second Stranger: Ha! Why, then, they were ten good dishes to a mess, with plenty of wine of all sorts, but it was very unpleasing that we had no knives and change of trenchers, and drank out of earthen pitchers and wooden dishes.

The serving of the Guildhall dinner in our time, by-the-way, demands 8000 plates and dishes. The system is now in use only in this country: the hall dinners at our Inns of Court are to-day served in courses of eight. "The guests sit down to a dinner of roast meat, a tart, and cheese to each nces consisting of four persons; each mess is also allowed a bottle of port wine." (Cornelius of London, p. 414.) With regard to the supplementary dishes for the Guildhall dinner, it may be urged that in the examples named, the dinners were French dinners, and that the Lord Mayor's dinner our feast of Lord Mayor's Day. This is a magnificent spectacle, the Guildhall with which would be impossible were the guests confined to those of eight, of which there would be 150, the number of guests at the Guildhall dinner being 1200. It would then become a question of space, through the dishes and the and the subdivision of the number of attendants, more especially as half our dinner, except the turtle, is served cold—i.e., placed on the table before the guests sit down. There would also require, for the new system, 150 turbots, 150 saddles of mutton, and 150 plum puddings. The grand scramble for the baron of beef, cut up by the "City carver," must also be dispensed with. The noise in the hall would be greater than under the old system. The waiter are the drawbacks of the feast. Even a Prime Minister can scarcely be heard. Both correspondents have been misinformed. The system is not new to us. Through a tolerably long "assistance" at City dinners we have ever found one of their characteristics to be profuseness. The conspicuous appearance of the latter with "confusion" was confounded." There is no sparseness at the Guildhall dinner; and the side dishes in the middle of the table are less profuse; the dishes at the companies' halls and at taverns, on "the Ninth," are equally liberal. Shortcomings are very rare at the Lord Mayor's Day feast. The proposed innovation must be left to the Entertainment Committee and the famous hosts of the Albion, who are to provide the Guildhall feast, which we would not change in the forms of civic hospitality. By-the-way, the dinner of "the Ninth" is to be followed by an entertainment at the Crystal Palace, a meeting similar to the National Temperance League, at which the Lord Mayor Elect has consented to preside; the usual—and unnecessary—display of fireworks at Sydenham will be the first party of "total abstainers" that ever met in our great banqueting-room. The walls prate of other flows of soul; and Log and Magog will look down, upon the scene.

The Imperial hand of improvement in the city of Paris has of late, and for many years past, wrought many old historic places, celebrated as once the abodes of men of genius, or the resting-places of distinguished personages of French history. Perchance the reader may recollect the Old Post Office in the Rue Jean Jacques Rousseau, a mansion of greater pretension than our Lord Mayor's house in Cornhard-street, built for a French postal service in the seventeenth century, and a new building is to be provided forthwith. At the time the French Government removed the Post-office to the Rue du Louvre, in 1757, the mansion was the sumptuous residence of M. Armenouville, the Duke of Berry, and the Duke of Orleans, the Duke of Bourbon, the Duke of Epernon, under the reign of Henri III. In one of its salons, on the 15th of April, 1650, died La Fontaine, who, being too indolent and improvident for state or domestic economy, was the victim of all sorts of difficulties, and would have been almost alone in the world had not his friend, M. Hervart, who was at that time owner of the Hôtel Armenouville, provided the poor poet with an asylum there. It was in this building, in 1760, that the penny post delivery was established, the inventor being a man before the Great Revolution, so irregular was the business that, in the Royal Almanach for the year 1780, "the public are warned not to drop any letters for the city of Paris into the box at the General Post Office, because such letters are transmitted to the Paris Post Office only once a week, and on the space of ground between the streets Rivoli, St. Honore, Mondovi, and Luxembourg. To make room for this new building, the church of the Petits Peres, and part of the cloisters of the Madeleine—will be taken down. It was built between 1670 and 1676.

The city in the City of Paris some of its churches has been revived, and, in advocacy of the plan, it is shown that St. Médard's, Poultry (the church of the late Rev. Dr. Jay of Walworth), was generally but a congregation of four or five parishioners on Sundays, and the whole congregation numbers only some sixteen or eighteen persons. These are cogent figures. In Hatton's time, 1760, the parish contained "76 houses and about 8 $\frac{1}{2}$."

Our old friend "the Man in the Moon" has puzzled as well as amused thousands. Alexander Neckam, whose works have been put published, traces a popular explanation of the spotted appearance of the Moon to the notion who had been condemned to the Moon for stealing thorns, "which," says Neckam's reviewer, "is very curious, as being the classical allusion we have to the popular legend of The Man in the Moon."

PARIS FASHIONS FOR NOVEMBER.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR NOVEMBER.

To multiply a lady's requirements appears to be the predominant idea of all the purveyors of fashion in female dress; and, as though one robe were not sufficient, the modistes have now introduced a description of double dress, which makes the wearer appear to indulge in two at a time—thus increasing the outlay; as, of course, the material for both must be good; otherwise they would not be in unison. One of our illustrations depicts this new style, which we leave to the appreciation of our fair readers.

Bonnets, in the proper acceptation of the term, are still getting smaller by degrees and beautifully less, dwindling gradually away till they have almost the appearance of small caps, richly ornamented with lace, flowers, and birds, the owlet often playing a conspicuous part in the composition of the actual Parisian chapeau. It appears, after all, that the small-sized bonnet is definitively adopted for the approaching winter, during which, also, the short paletot (mostly in light cloth) will be generally worn for ordinary toilet; but, for full dress, the ruched camail, the burnous, and the eternal châle de cachemire. For indoor wear, red cloth or cashmere vests are very fashionable, and are very becoming to either dark or fair complexions, an advantage which is peculiar to this colour, now more popular than ever. One or two new pardesnes are about to be introduced, and we shall have an opportunity of illustrating them in our next month's Engraving of the Paris Fashions.

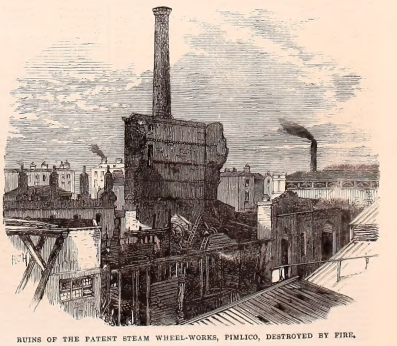
The spirit of exaggeration which we have so frequently observed is now applied to earrings, which have acquired almost dangerous dimensions. The jewellers of the Palais-Royale seem to vie with each other daily in the production of something larger than has hitherto been seen, until the proportions of these aural pendants have become quite monstrous. All forms have been adopted and magnified, so that we have the triangular, the long, the wide, and the round cymbal-shaped earrings, of a fearful weight, in gold. In keeping with these, the wide leather bells are fastened by buckles of from four to six inches in length, and made of every possible material. Something more agreeable, and certainly far more graceful, is the black lace waistband, fastened behind with a bow and rather short ends. It is to be hoped that these pretty waistbands will finally triumph over the harness-looking belts, which, however, it must be confessed, find favour in the eyes of many of the showy Parisiennes.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Fig. 1. Morning Dress.—This is altogether an "at home" costume, the colour of the dress being generally light, over a gay-coloured jupe, which is seen through the openings left expressly in the dress, buttoned in front and behind, much in the manner of a robe de chambre. The material of the dress depicted in our Engraving is light-brown cashmere, over a blue jupe. The graduating bottoms employed may be either in dull gold or in mother-of-pearl.

Fig. 2. Ball Dress.—White tarlatan robe, ornamented round the bottom of the skirt with two fluted flounces, surmounted by a straw-coloured silk edging. Over the two bottom flounces four others are draped in the style shown in our Illustration; and above these two apparent jupes is a third, also in white tarlatan, disposed shawlwise, and in a point behind, while forming a tunic in front. The uppermost jupe is provided with a deep lace trimming, surmounted by a bouillonné, through which a light blue ribbon is passed. There is a very wide dark-blue silk waistband, fastened by a bow behind. The décolleté corsage is covered with a bertha trimmed with lace and bouillonné. The coiffure is arranged in the latest style, the ornamentation consisting of a white and a blue feather, intertwined, and partly concealing the golden comb.

Fig. 3. Walking Dress.—The robe and paletot are in stone-coloured foulard, trimmed throughout with violet silk ruching. The only ornament on the skirt is a narrow fluted flounce. Small straw bonnet, with a rose between two black velvets, is the tour-de-tête; violet silk bow and ends.



ST. JOHN'S EPISCOPAL CHURCH, OBAN, ARGYLESHIRE.

ST. JOHN'S EPISCOPAL CHURCH, OBAN.

We have engraved a View of the Episcopal Church or Chapel of St. John, recently erected for the accommodation of persons accustomed to the Anglican form of worship at Oban, in Argyleshire. This little town, which is situated at the head of a bay frequented in summer by the steamers bringing tourists to explore the West Highlands, has grown up, within the memory of this generation, from a mere hamlet of two or three poor cottages, to be a place of some resort as the chief port for passenger-traffic on that part of the Scottish coast. Its development has been fostered by the Duke of Argyll, the Marquis of Breadalbane, and Mr. Campbell, of Sonachan, who are the principal landowners in the district. As the facility of access from Oban to the picturesque scenery in its neighbourhood yearly attracts a larger concourse of English visitors, the building represented in our Illustration has been provided with a view to the taste and convenience of those sojourners who may not be disposed to attend the services of the Presbyterian Kirk. Its design is creditable to the architect, Mr. D. Thomson, of Glasgow.

THE FIRE AT THE PATENT STEAM WHEEL-WORKS, PIMLICO.

We mentioned in our last the great fire at the Pimlico Patent Steam Wheel-works, early in the morning of Sunday week. Our Illustration is a view of the ruins, engraved after a photograph taken by Mr. A. Bool. The buildings thus destroyed, consisting of three engine-houses with their boiler-houses, and the greater part of the workshops and warehouses for the stock, formed a very extensive series of buildings, which occupied a space of more than two acres, having a frontage with entrance-gates in Lower Belgrave-place. They were conspicuous by the lofty shaft of a brick chimney rising far above the surrounding housetops. It is fortunate, indeed, that this tall chimney did not fall and crush everything near it when the roof, by which it was partly supported, gave way and came to the ground. The amount of property destroyed is many thousand pounds, and a great number of workmen in the service of Messrs. Smith, Parfrey, and Smith are thrown out of employment; but the disaster would have been still more considerable if the adjoining premises—those of Messrs. Trollope and Sons, the builders—had shared the fate of the wheel-works. Much praise is due to the firemen and conductors of the engines present on this occasion. The first which arrived was that belonging to the station in the Horseferry-road; next came the parish engine of St. John's, Westminster, which was followed by a steam fire-engine belonging to Messrs. Hodges' distillery at Lambeth; but several engines of the London Fire Brigade, and three of Shand, Mason, and Co.'s steam fire-engines were soon brought to bear upon the conflagration with a powerful effect, though for many hours after its fury was suppressed there was a smouldering fire in the ruins.

THE CONVICTION OF FRANZ MULLER.

THE trial and conviction of Franz Müller for the murder of Mr. Briggs on the North London Railway bring home to us one of the most impressive lessons of the history of crime. It is this; that men cannot wholly disentangle themselves from the traces of their past actions, and that where the motive for rescuing from the common stream of oblivion any precise passage of their lives is sufficiently strong, the record of it is almost sure to be found in circumstances the obliteration of which is beyond their own power. Obscure as we may be; silent, cautious, and seemingly confined to our own knowledge as may be our movements; and whether they be for good or evil, it would seem that we are all alike under the necessity, imposed upon us by the ordinary laws which govern our being, of leaving behind us, somewhere or other, an imprint distinct enough to tell our tale. That the recovery of this record is seldom attempted or effected, except in cases of atrocious crime, is due to the fact that in no other case is the motive so powerful or so widely operative as to stimulate the minute research indispensable to success. Hence it is that the well-founded and salutary belief obtains so widely among men that "murder will out." There is no reason for concluding that Divine Providence departs from the settled order of things for the detection of this crime more than of others, but there is ground for the belief that where human life has been cut short by a foul wrong there will be, just in proportion to the horror and alarm which the act has excited, a persevering effort to detect in the circumstances by which it is surrounded and with which it is connected the footmarks which the perpetrator has unconsciously left upon a multitude of otherwise trivial events. We all of us leave upon something, no matter what, a photograph of our actions as we pass along the path of life, and whenever society is deeply interested in getting possession of the picture, or series of pictures, at any given interval, the means for doing so, although they may occasionally be missed, are almost invariably within reach.

The story of Franz Müller's crime, as brought out by his trial, is, perhaps, one of the most striking illustrations exhibited in modern times of the order of things we have described above. A gentleman, still alive, but speechless and cruelly mangled, is found, after ten o'clock at night on Saturday, July 9, lying on the "six-foot way" of the North London Railway. He is too seriously injured to give any account of himself, and dies a few hours after he has been conveyed to his home. Upon his body, however, is written, with unerring certainty, the fact that he has been the victim of a frightful atrocity. The carriage in which he had taken his place at Fenchurch-street arrives at Hackney-wick, but no one is seen to leave it. Two or three passengers get in and find the cushions wet with blood. They call the guard, who locks up the carriage, sends it on to the terminus, and telegraphs thither the facts which have been brought to his knowledge. The carriage is searched. A crushed hat, a walking-stick smeared with blood, a jump-ring, and cushions saturated with gore, constitute all the materials therein upon which had been written the record of crime. Mr. Briggs's wounds, his lost hat, his watch and chain gone—these are the remaining items of information. Altogether, they tell no tale but that murder has been committed. But who is the criminal, and where? Viewed by themselves, they throw no light upon these momentous questions. The murderer, as we now know, was Franz Müller, a young man who passed among his few acquaintances for a steady, industrious, kindly, humane person, and against whom no antecedents, up to the hour of this deadly deed, have yet been found pointing him out as a likely man to commit so desperate a crime. For weeks past he has been talking of emigrating to America, and thither, a few days after the murder, he has sailed, without a shade of suspicion upon him. But Mr. Briggs's fate was surrounded by circumstances which struck terror into society. Unusually large rewards were offered—extraordinarily powerful motives were brought into play—to effect, if possible, a discovery of the murderer. Mr. Briggs's broken watchchain, exchanged by Mr. Death, the jeweller, for another of somewhat less value, and for a ring to make up the difference, is brought by that gentleman under the notice of the police. Mr. Death and his brother are able to describe the appearance of the man who offered them that chain. Presently afterwards a cabman picks up in his own house a paper box which Franz Müller had given his child as a plaything, and sees on it the singular name of the jeweller. The clue is given. And now, mark how the minutest traces of Müller's recent life, wholly unconnected as they were with his crime, reappear in damning evidence against him. The history of Müller's hat, all unimportant as it must have appeared to him at the time of its occurrence, was, in substance, the latest record of Mr. Briggs's murder by his hand. Concurrent with it was the history of Mr. Briggs's hat, found in the possession of Müller in America. A multiplicity of the most trivial incidents relating to these two hats fixed the outrage upon Franz Müller. There was other evidence pointing in the same direction. No human eye but his own had seen the crime. No human being but himself suspected him of it when he got away on board the ship Victoria from the British coasts. But he had left behind him, impressed upon a number of trivial and forgotten events, a trace of his movements, and before he had completed his voyage he was in the hands of justice.

The first feeling excited in the public mind by the news of Müller's conviction was undoubtedly one of relief. His was a new experiment in crime, and its seeming success made hundreds of thousands of daily travellers tremble with a sense of insecurity. It is satisfactory to find the atrocity brought home to the delinquent, even under circumstances peculiarly favourable to his escape, by evidence of all but invincible force. Probably no intelligent man who has attentively read—and who has not?—the report of the murder-trials could entertain a doubt of the justice of the verdict. Perhaps, too, society is not ill pleased at finding that the murder was evidently the result of sudden temptation—was not planned by an adept—was not the consummation of many days or weeks' contrivances—and, above all, has not in its less flexible form popularised itself as a safe and convenient method of achieving robbery with violence. Had Müller, as seemed at first too likely, finally evaded justice, it is hard to conceive the various forms of mischief that might have ensued. Men would—as, in fact, before the discovery of the murderer was found, men did—confront each other in railway carriages with savage suspicion, and social confidence "on the line" would have been rudely shaken. The crime, undetected, would have operated to repeat itself, and it is impossible to foresee the extent to which it might have disorganised the daily mechanism of commercial life. Happily, this dark prospect has passed away, and the avenging hand of justice has dissipated a host of highly disagreeable fears.

The calmness, the patient carefulness, and the impartiality with which the trial of the culprit has been conducted must add to the satisfaction with which Englishmen regard its issue. From first to last no administrative or judicial step has been taken of which the accused could make a reasonable complaint. He himself elected to be tried by a jury of Englishmen. He was defended, owing to the generosity of his compatriots in this country, by all that legal ability and ingenuity, quickened by intense earnestness, could do for him. No room exists for the slightest suspicion that the witnesses for the prosecution were prompted by malicious or sinister designs. Every incident and point of importance in the case every conjecture that was urged, was scrutinised with the utmost conscientiousness. Judges and jury discharged their respective duties with an evident sense of painful responsibility. The facts, however, and the facts only, thoroughly sifted as they were, constituted the accusation—a story which, had he been innocent, might have most easily disposed of the evidence against him, helped not a little to rivet the charge upon him. He was the only man in the court, and, we may add, in the kingdom, who, on the hypothesis that he did not commit the crime, held a key to the explanation of the adverse testimony of many concurrent facts, and the key which he furnished unlocked nothing. He gave no account of himself comparable for trustworthiness with the account given by the photograph of his actions upon events. His own movements had produced the handwriting on the wall which ensured his doom.

We cannot close our comment on this terrible episode of our social history without an expression of hope that railway directors will, as speedily as possible, close up the one opportunity for the commission of crime which continues to have flashed temptation into the heart of Franz Müller. The complete isolation of travellers on a railroad between station and station offers to desperate men dangerous facilities for the gratification of any sudden criminal impulse. After all that has occurred it will be an inexcusable and indelible disgrace to those who administer the affairs of railway management to allow of the continuance of those facilities a moment beyond the time required for such mechanical changes as the safety of travellers renders indispensable. It is in the power of directors to make crimes of violence on a railway journey all but impossible; when will they be convinced that to do so will serve their interests as much as it will conduce to the comfort and confidence of the public?

THE WESTMINSTER SCHOLARS' ATHLETIC SPORTS.
Our front page contains an illustration of the athletic sports in which the pupils of the Westminster School are accustomed to distinguish themselves, in that spacious playground formed by the inclosure of Vincent-square, which has been appropriated to their use from the time when Tothill-fields, of which it was a part, were built on a considerable distance beyond the precincts of the Abbey, where are now the modern streets of Pimlico and the buildings on the Chelsea bank. The public exhibition of these performances, on Thursday and Friday week, proved highly interesting to attract a numerous and fashionable company of spectators, including, of course, many of the relatives and friends of the young gentlemen at the school. The proceedings were managed by a committee, which consisted of Messrs. Steward, Behrens, and Hunt. The programme included a flat race of 100 yards, open to all: a second race, for small boys only; and a race of 500 yards; but the grand contest was a half-mile race, with eight hurdles to leap at the finish, and this was won by Mr. F. Giles, Mr. Lucas coming in second and Mr. Walker third. Our Engraving represents an incident of this race. There was another hurdle-race of 440 yards, with eight hurdles 3 ft. high, for the younger boys; besides which there were contests in jumping, with and without the pole, which afforded good proof of the lively strength and agility of the Westminster scholars.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

The interview between the two Emperors at Nice has taken place. The Emperor Napoleon left Paris at noon on Wednesday week, slept at Lyons, and arrived late on Thursday night at Nice. On Friday morning he was purposing to visit the Emperor and Empress of Russia, when the former, at an early hour, made his appearance in uniform, attended by his suite, at the Emperor's quarters, anxious to anticipate the visit and the first to offer his thanks for the cordial reception he had met with in France. A private interview took place between the Sovereigns, apparently of no great length, for at half-past ten the Emperor proceeded to the Villa Pallhon to pay his respects to the Empress of Russia. The rest of the day was occupied by a drive to Villafranche and the inspection of the port and the ships lying therein, with a dinner at the Russian villa, after which the two Emperors were together for the night at the theatre. On Saturday morning, at eight, the Emperor of the French left for Toulon. Here he witnessed a sham fight. On the following morning he reached Marseilles, where he had an interview with the Prince Napoleon, at Leghorn, which he held a review. He was warmly received at all these places. On Monday evening the Majesty returned to St. Cloud. The Czar left Nice soon after the departure of the Emperor Napoleon, and is now on a visit to the King of Prussia, at Potsdam, where he arrived on Wednesday afternoon, accompanied by the Grand Duke of Saxe Weimar. Victor Emmanuel could not himself go to Nice, as previously stated, but sent General Menabrea to congratulate the Czar and the Emperor Napoleon in the name of the King of Italy. A semi-official Paris journal takes occasion to declare that this interview had no political meaning; and that Russia, desiring to preserve the liberty of action, does not seek any special alliance with France.

It is confidently stated that Count Persigny will go to Constantinople in the autumn.

The first series of visitors are expected to arrive here on the 9th.

The Paris journal La Patrie has replied to the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres to give its opinion on the utility of abolishing the modern pronunciation of Greek into the colleges of France; and a commission has been formed to examine the new and distinguished Hellenists, on whose report a decision may be taken.

The prizes for the late international shooting-match at Vincennes have been awarded. The first in the list of winners appears the name of Mr. Biggs, of Leicestershire. He fired with a Metford rifle, with 24 at the longest range, 300 metres, and won a gold medal, although contesting with 1000 competitors.

Intelligence has been received from Algeria announcing that General Yusuf completed the subjugation of the greater part of the evil tribes of Beghar on the 31st of October. Several columns took part in the offensive, to make simultaneous attacks upon the insurgents of the fourth from different sides, and the plan succeeded well. The plan is expected to produce decisive results.

The Moniteur also mentions a sharp rencontre with the remainder of the insurgent Mexican army, which was put to flight, with the loss of twenty prisoners, 500 killed and wounded, by 500 French and 100 Mexican troops. This brilliant affair of arms the French Colonel in command was cut in two by a cannon ball.

SPAIN.

The official Gazette published a long report addressed by the Ministry to the Queen respecting the education of the Prince of the Asturias, which is to this effect:—

The careful and thorough training your Majesty has hitherto given to your august son, and the exquisite tact of which your Majesty has afforded abundant proofs, are the guarantees which the country has a right to expect your Majesty will reserve to yourself the superior direction of the Prince's education. This is the most just and most valuable guarantee of its excellence.

The report is followed by the annexed decree:—

Considering the report submitted by my Council of Ministers, and desiring that the highest importance, and the most solicitude, be given to the study of the Asturias, should respond to the necessities and high interests of the nation, I decree as follows:—

Art. 1. From the present time the professional education of the Prince of the Asturias will be conducted with the utmost care, and solicitude, for the development of his aptitudes.

Art. 2. The Queen, my mother, with the consent of the Ministerial Council, will propose to me such professors as they shall consider suitable to conduct the education of the Prince.

Art. 3. I reserve to myself the chief personal superintendence of the education and instruction of the Prince of the Asturias.

Sir,—Your correspondent "Sarratoga Springs" has not exaggerated. What was it like? Well, let me see. Say half a pint of very small tar, brewed during a thunder-storm at Brentford, and retailed for an unusual period to a chandler's shop in seven-dials, where the trade wasn't brisk, and the tar brewings and the pitchy fire blazers were kept on the top of the coals; then diluted with the water in which cabbages had been boiled, and the droppings of the gingham umbrella, bought secondhand in Vinegar-yard, on the first November day after the spring, and retailed at the Derby dinner for by sovereigns and upwards; then concocted in a big pot, and the dregs of turpentine thus come over to a ship otherwise laden with grease and Monte Videan hides, with the horns and hoofs on; mingled with the refuse of a dyeworks, stirred through a gaspipe, to make it sweet and clear, but finished up—by the by, a big inch auger should be added—and then well stirred up with a brass candlestick, far gone in vestigies. This may give you an approximate idea of what the water of my first and last spring in Saratoga was like.—Q. A. Sate.

The railway traffic near Durham has been much deranged during the last few days. Owing to the embankment across the valley, near the Sherburn station, about three miles from the city, having given way, the line is blocked up. Through this breach a stream is carried under the embankment, has become choked with the accumulation of sand, &c., and has burst its way through the embankment. A large extent of sixteen acres, is flooded; and the present of water, left, deep on the line, has rendered the passage of the ordinary trains impossible. The whole country below.

The presentation was made by Mr. Thomas Parker, J.P., the Incumbent of Willenhall. On a previous occasion Hughes had saved the life of a fellow-workman, named Thomas Bagley, who was in a pit when the roof fell in, saved the lives of others. THE NEW GERMAN HOSPITAL, DALSTON.

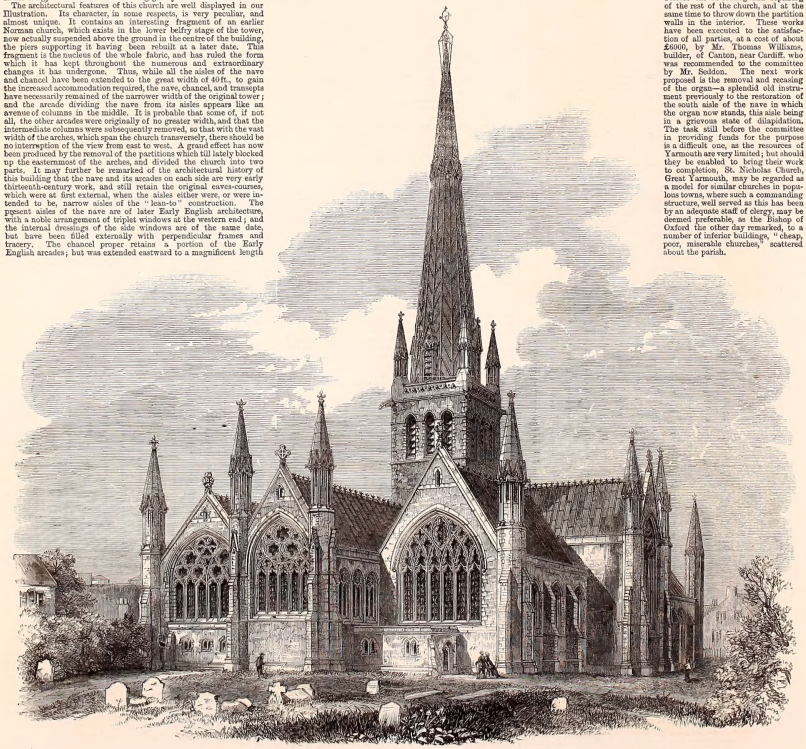
The German Hospital in Dalston was founded nineteen years ago, in the premises just then vacated by the London Fever Hospital, in Cale Street, Hackney-road, a wooden building, with modern accommodation, has now been erected in what is called formerly the garden of the old hospital, near the Kingsland station of the North London Railway. The present site, on which was erected the building now opened by his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, on Saturday, the 15th ult. It contains two blocks—the one containing the wards, in which there is room for a hundred patients, and other containing the apartments of the medical officers and servants, with the board-room and committee-room. For eight or ten patients of a special class paying for their own accommodation there are suites of rooms in the centre of the wards have windows on both sides, to the north and south, affording a thorough ventilation, and are clear 13½ feet, high, providing 1600 cubic feet of air for each bed. Attached to each is the end its scullery, bath, and other conveniences, and rooms for the nurse and for the patient. On the ground floor is a resident ward for ten beds, with attached scullery and nurses' room, and also the out-patients' department, with a doctor's consulting room, and other purposes, near the entrance-gates. There are three rooms on the first floor for the medical officers, a dispensary, laboratory, and lobby for waiting. The chapel, 30 feet by 20 feet, and 16 ft. high, is placed, at the east end, having over the communion-table a stained-glass window, in memory of the late Prince Consort, designed by H. J. Rubles, and the floor has an ornamental pavement of Minton's tiles. These consist of the children's ward, the women's ward, the men's ward, and the nurses' and for four sculleries, and two nurses' rooms, and the nurse's room, and a larger, or upper-class ward, consist of two large wards, of twenty beds each, with two sculleries, and two nurses' and for the nurse's room. There are five rooms for male attendants or stores. There is a lift for carrying meals, and for conveying the dead from the basement to each floor, worked by hydraulic apparatus, which, and the gas-engine, are placed in the basement-and on each landing is a store-closet. The basement has a bath-room and regulator and two bath-rooms, with separate conveniences. A corridor connects the ward building on each floor with the northern or residential block, in which is elevated to the kitchen and domestic apartments, matron's store-room, housekeeper's room, and other offices, the chief bulk of the washing having been done by the patients. The basement contains the boiler-house and staircase, committee, chaplain's, and secretary's rooms, matron's sitting-room and dining-room, and those for male sisters, medical men's common sitting and sleeping rooms, clerk's office, and waiting-room, each side of the hall, the walls of which are to have enamelled slabs, with the names of deceased benefactors. On the first floor are the operation-rooms and two separate cases-rooms attached, rooms for contributing patients, and bed-rooms for the matron and sisters. With a total area of 1,200 feet, the building has been found to be executed by Professor Donaldson, with the co-operation of Mr. Edward A. Gruning; and the Messrs. Lawson are the contractors. The cost of the structure and some of the fittings amounts to about £12,500; the embellishment of porter's lodge, dead-house, and post-mortem rooms, sheds, and coach-house, £1000; the cooking apparatus, by Rubles, £125; the heating apparatus of the wards, baths, and sculleries, by the London Heating and Ventilating Company, £241 6s.; the lift, £180; gas fittings, £176 10s.; and bells, £52 10s. Some few minor fittings have yet to be arranged for. It should here be recorded that the creation of this new building is due, in a great measure, to the munificent donations of the late Mr. Frederick Huth and his family; as well as to the exertions of Mr. D. Meinertzhagen, treasurer, and of the Rev. Adolphus Wallbaum, the honorary secretary, and other zealous friends of the institution.



RESTORATION OF ST. NICHOLAS CHURCH, GREAT YARMOUTH

THE noble old parish church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, at Great Yarmouth, having undergone a partial restoration, was reopened with a festival service on Friday, the 21st ult. This is one of the largest and finest parish churches in England; and on the present occasion—for the first time certainly within two hundred years—its magnificent extent and internal proportions could be fully realised, since the partition-walls had been removed which formerly divided its area into two distinct parts. It had been a question anxiously considered whether so vast a space would not be more than would allow the voice of a preacher to be heard throughout. This question was, however, triumphantly set at rest on the opening day, when the eloquent sermon of the Bishop of Oxford was listened to by a congregation estimated to number about 5000 persons, and was distinctly heard even by those at the extremest distance from the pulpit. But a still greater number, probably about 6000 persons, were gathered together in the evening, when the Bishop of the diocese preached. Full choral service was performed on each occasion, the choir of Norwich Cathedral assisting. The Bishop of Columbia, who was formerly Incumbent of Great Yarmouth, was present, and took part in the services. An elegantly-served luncheon was provided at the Townhall in the afternoon. The Mayor of the borough, Mr. R. Steward, presided; and was supported by Lord Sondes; Sir E. H. K. Lacon, M.P.; Mr. E. Howes, M.P.; the Bishops of Norwich, Oxford, and Columbia; the Ven. Archdeacon Hankinson, the Rev. Canon Neville, and a large number of the clergy of the diocese and leading gentry of the district.

The architectural features of this church are well displayed in our Illustration. Its character, in some respects, is very peculiar, and almost unique. It contains an interesting fragment of an earlier Norman church, which exists in the lower belfry stage of the tower, now actually suspended above the ground in the centre of the building, the piers supporting it having been rebuilt at a later date. This fragment is the nucleus of the whole fabric, and has ruled the form which it has kept throughout the numerous and extraordinary changes it has undergone. Thus, while all the aisles of the nave and chancel have been extended to the great width of 40ft., to gain the increased accommodation required, the nave, chancel, and transepts have necessarily remained of the narrower width of the original tower; and the arcade dividing the nave from its aisles appears like an avenue of columns in the middle. It is probable that some of, if not all, the other arcades were originally of no greater width, and that the intermediate columns were subsequently removed, so that with the vast width of the arches, which span the church transversely, there should be no interruption of the view from east to west. A grand effect has now been produced by the removal of the partitions which till lately blocked up the easternmost of the arches, and divided the church into two parts. It may further be remarked of the architectural history of this building that the nave and its arcades on each side are very early thirteenth-century work, and still retain the original eaves-courses, which were at first external, when the aisles either were, or were intended to be, narrow aisles of the "lean-to" construction. The present aisles of the nave are of later Early English architecture, with a noble arrangement of triplet windows at the western end; and the internal dressings of the side windows are of the same date, but have been filled externally with perpendicular frames and tracery. The chancel proper retains a portion of the Early English arcades; but was extended eastward to a magnificent length in the Decorated style of Gothic architecture; and, at the same time, received its spacious aisles. Lastly, the transepts were carried up to the same height, and completed in the latest Decorated style. The church again suffered extensive alterations, which cannot be called improvements, in the period of the Perpendicular style made by him for this work amounted to about £2300. Towards this the Dean and Chapter of Norwich voted the sum of £1000; and it was decided to undertake the restoration of the central tower, the reconstruction of its pinnacles (the spire being left for the present), and the rebuilding of the eastern end of the chancel, thus completing the series of changes which have rendered it a monument of every phase of English ecclesiastical architecture. It would have been well had this been all; but during the last three centuries the church was barbarously neglected, and suffered to fall into decay and ruin, till, in 1794, the east end came to the ground, and was then shortened 10 ft. and rebuilt in a most wretched manner. At the commencement of this century an incredible sum (nearly £30,000) was expended in backing off all the external mouldings and covering the surface with cement; while a truncated and ill-proportioned spire was erected in place of the lofty but decayed older spire and of the pinnacles which had surrounded it. In 1845 a happier era was inaugurated, and the interior of the western portion of the building was repaired, resented, and brought into a condition fit for public service, by the exertions of the Rev. H. Mackenzie, then Incumbent, and under the direction of Mr. J. H. Hakewill, the architect. It was, however, in the year 1862 that the Church Restoration Committee, of which the Rev. H. R. Neville, the present Incumbent, and honorary Canon of Norwich, was the chairman, and Mr. Charles J. Palmer, F.S.A., was the honorary secretary, engaged the services of Mr. John P. Seddon, architect, of London, and instructed him to prepare drawings for a complete and thorough restoration of the fabric. The estimate besides the re-roofing and repairing of the rest of the church, and at the same time to throw down the partition walls in the interior. These works have been executed to the satisfaction of all parties, at a cost of about £6000, by Mr. Thomas Williams, builder, of Canton, near Cardiff, who was recommended to the committee by Mr. Seddon. The next work proposed is the removal and recasing of the organ—a splendid old instrument previously to the restoration of the south aisle of the nave in which the organ now stands, this aisle being in a grievous state of dilapidation. The task still before the committee in providing funds for the purpose is a difficult one, as the resources of Yarmouth are very limited; but should they be enabled to bring their work to completion, St. Nicholas Church, Great Yarmouth, may be regarded as a model for similar churches in populous towns, where such a commanding structure, well served as this has been by an adequate staff of clergy, may be deemed preferable, as the Bishop of Oxford the other day remarked, to a number of inferior buildings, "cheap, poor, miserable churches," scattered about the parish.

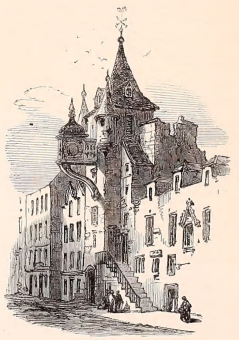
EDINBURGH.

If Nature and Art had agreed to unite for the production of a city which, without reaching the highest beauty of either, should yet exhibit the fairest example of their combined attractions, it would be difficult to fix upon any that more nearly approaches this ideal than Edinburgh. It claims for itself, with no undue assumption, the title of the "Modern Athens;" and anyone who has visited its ancient prototype, or has seen Williams's views of Athens upon the walls of the Scottish National Gallery, can hardly fail to recognise the propriety of the name. What the Acropolis and Areopagus are to the one the Calton and Castle Hills are to the other, whilst Mount Lycabettus is worthily balanced by the magnificent heights of the Salisbury Craigs and Arthur's Seat; and the Pentland Hills in the distant background correspond in appearance and half in name with the classic range of Mount Pentelicus. Where Nature has been so lavish, Art has not refused to do her part for the embellishment of the city. It is not too much to say that there is no capital in Europe, with the single exception of Paris, where utility has been so much subordinated to architectural effect as in Edinburgh. As if to justify its classical pretensions in its buildings no less than in its natural features, there is to be seen on the Calton Hill the still unfinished national monument in honour of those who fell at Waterloo. It was originally intended to be a reproduction of the Parthenon at Athens, but a want of funds prevented the completion of the design. The idea was a noble one, and the spirit with which the citizens of Edinburgh have proceeded in the decoration of their city may be gathered from their petition to George IV., in 1822, with reference to this building. They there say, "The near resemblance of Edinburgh to one of the most celebrated classical cities of antiquity has suggested to us the idea of restoring the Parthenon of Athens on the Calton Hill, to comprehend a place for Divine worship, where the contributors, and also your Majesty's forces stationed in and about Edinburgh, who have no adequate provision of the kind, may be accommodated." Though the first stone was laid by the King on the occasion of his visit to Scotland, in 1822, the work proceeded no farther than the picturesque fragment which does so much towards giving a classic air to the city. Seen from a distance, it bears a considerable resemblance to the ruins of the Temple of the Olympian Zeus at Athens, which in its day had to languish for the same unpoetical want of funds, and was only completed some centuries after its foundation by the taste and liberality of the Roman Emperor Hadrian. If his spirit, the animula, vagula, blandula, which he so tenderly apostrophised in his last hours, ever return to this earth, we may yet see a modern Parthenon upon the heights of a modern Athens. Not far from the national monument, the refined taste of Playfair has adorned the Calton with a memorial to Dugald Stewart, after the design of the still extant choragic monument of Lysicrates. Not very classical, but massive and imposing, rises the monument to Nelson—a defiant-looking column, reminding the spectator of one of his own cannons standing on end, or perhaps even more like to a gigantic model of that telescope which he put to his blind eye before Copenhagen, to enable him to read the signal which called him off from danger! On the slope of the Calton Hill is built the High School—a classic structure in the best taste, suggestive of the object for which it was erected, and in all respects well adapted to its purpose. Minerva, baulked of her Parthenon, may find a resting-place here. Opposite to this is one of the many monuments which Scotland has raised in honour of Burns. Built like the ancient temples of Vesta, it typifies the eternal fire of genius that glowed within the breast of this immortal poet—and, alas! too, too mortal man. Though one memorial of him is here, he was no poet of cities. His spirit rather lingers among the scenes where once he, as Milton says of Shakspeare, "Fancy's child, warbled his native wood-notes wild," and, wandering over "banks and braes," sang in his own tongue of—

> Ilka grove the cushat kens,
> The hazelly shaws and briery dens,
> The burnies, wimplin down the glens,
> Wi' toddlin din,
> Or foaming strang, wi' hasty stens,
> Frae lin to lin!



We may pause ere we descend from the Calton Hill, and look on either hand at the imposing spectacle of the city before us. To the left is the Old Town—the Edinburgh par excellence of the past—beginning from the ruined Abbey and Palace of Holyrood, and rising by the Canongate and High-street till it culminates in the ancient fortress that crowns the Castle Hill. Before us, and to our right, stretches the New Town, which, magnificent and imposing as it has now become, has not yet completed its hundredth year of existence. It has still to create its history and traditions. The noble esplanade of Princes'-street, one of the finest in the world for position and architectural beauty, has no greater antiquity than the two edifices of George III.—the Prince of Wales and the Duke of York—from whom it derives its name. It narrowly escaped being called St. Giles-street, in honour of the patron saint of Edinburgh, whose cathedral church, surmounted with a regal crown, still gives title to the Old Town a reminiscence of its ancient glory. The tragedy of George III. prevented this ill-omened name from being attached to the street. It was suggested to him he is reported to have exclaimed, "Hey, hey? What, what? No, Giles-street? Never do, never do!" Saved from the fate that seems to attend most of their localities which confess to be under the rule of particular tutelage, Princes'-street is, and is likely to remain, the chief street of Edinburgh. It forms the universal rendezvous, and the principal attractions of the new town. It is hither that the visitor first proceeds on his arrival, and it is here that, in the splendid hotels with which it abounds, he meets with as much luxury and comfort as in any city in Europe. It is in itself a sight to see, as it is passed for the greatest effect. Facing the centre of this street, and looking down upon the elopes and lawns of the Princes'-gardens, stands the Scott monument. It is one of the few memorials in Great Britain which are worthy either of the art-culture or the discovery of the man we delight but find it so hard to honour. It is after the fashion of the celebrated Eleanor's cross, and has a canopy for the statue of the author of Sir Walter and his dog. Though the design is borrowed from a mediæval source, yet it is treated with a breadth and freedom which gives it a title to be considered an original work. Its height makes it a conspicuous object from almost every part of the city, so that, whether we look at it from the Calton or the Castle Hill, we have still a glimpse of it from the old wynds and closes of the Canongate, or the newly-built streets that lie beyond the gardens, it seems to occupy a position which even his marvellous eye for the picturesque might have chosen. There is a fitness in the idea that the most conspicuous monument in Scottish capital should be dedicated to the Walter Scott. It was his birthplace, and was loved by him as his "own romantic town." But Edinburgh, beyond all other, and even excepting Burns, has lent a charm or opened out a tradition to almost every street and wynd of the Old Town of Edinburgh, as well as to every river and loch, and glen and mountain, of all his native land, is appropriately honoured by one of the most beautiful monuments of modern art. No poet ever did so much for his country. He was the first who effectually made others, besides his own countrymen, read the epitaph inscribed on Flodden, against Scotchmen, and to see in the large-hearted ness of one born beyond the Tweed. Never was writer so national and yet so cosmopolitan. Though his works delighted all the civilised world, he made their chief interest centre upon the land of his birth. As we look again and again at the memorial which his countrymen have reared to his genius, we feel that, though it is not more than adequate to his merits, it is redeemed from the failure that usually befals our attempts in that direction, that in honouring him they have added a lasting attraction to Edinburgh.

The Sea, by some has other features of which it may boast. Everywhere one sees signs of the wealth and prosperity which almost within the memory of the present generation have originated round the Nor' Loch. From the Canongate and its purlieus. In direct contrast to the faded glories of the ancient part of the city, the New Town is everywhere conspicuous for its broad and regular streets, its sumptuous banks, the towers and domes of its churches, its fine hotels, its classic museum, its public monuments, and its long architectural vistas terminating, as in Paris, with some artificial or natural attraction, and thus breaking the monotony of the view.

Amongst the most beautiful buildings are the Museum and the National Gallery of Scotland. In the former there is a small but very interesting collection of antiquities and curiosities; and amongst others the Maiden, an instrument exactly resembling the guillotine and undoubtedly the model from which the French device was taken. Rob Roy's purse-clasp, ingeniously contrived by that honest chieftain to prevent robbery, and perhaps suggestive of the spring lock then of the portemonnaie of the present day; the ring which Robert Bruce gave to Sir Simon Fraser, in token of his penitence; a model of the Old Tolbooth; a valuable collection of coins; and many good specimens of Keltic remains. The building itself is in the form of a Grecian temple, and, together with its neighbour the National Gallery, which is in a severer style of architecture, overlooks the whole classic bosom of the valley of the Hill. In the gallery there are some excellent pictures, ancient and modern. Amongst the former are two magnificent portraits of Venetian senators by Tintoretto; the Lamentation family and the Italian nobleman, by Vandyck; a tender piece by Greuze—a girl with a dead canary—a specimen of Paul Veronese's manner; a Dutch piece of strange picture, by Tiepolo, of the finding of Moses. Pharaoh's daughter is represented as a fair-haired girl, in a yellow silk dress with Turkish trousers, and jewelled armlets and ornaments to match. Round her neck she wears a locket containing the miniature of some favoured swain. Next to a lady of the Court in a dark silk dress and white ruff like Queen Elizabeth, and of the order of beauty called "scraggy," not unlike the description of Mrs. Skewton. Moses' mother is represented as a gipsy, with the usual display of red. Altogether the picture is as strange a piece of anachronism as can be imagined. Among the modern pictures are a very beautiful Madonna, by Miss Graham, by Gainsborough; Lady Hamilton, by Sir Thomas Lawrence; Lord Eaton's pair of "Oberon and Titania;" Wilkie's pair of "Pertens' Mob;" Nicol's "Day After the Fair;" and Etty's large Scriptural pieces, which produce a better effect here than they did in the Exhibition building, though, happily, they are not there cracked, and in many places the surface has peeled off. On the whole, the collection is very good, and forms an excellent accessory to a visit to larger gallery.

The valley which separates the New from the Old Town was originally a lake, called the Nor' Loch. It is now drained and intersected by the railway, which, the everything else in Edinburgh, for from being an eyesore, is quite ornamental, and where not ornamental, is concealed beneath the city. Its sides are planted with trees, which are kept in order a natural part of the out embellishment of Princes' Gardens.

The first object which every one visits in the Old Town is the renowned Castle of Edinburgh. Its origin is lost in the mists of antiquity, but the situation is so commanding that it has doubtless been occupied ever since primitive times because civilised life was a life of offence and defence. The castle, of which we give an Engraving taken from the Greyfriars, in many places very much resembles Ehrenbreitstein. The ascent is by a road, where one can almost imagine, save for their healthy looks and active movements, that the soldiers were sickmen. The principal objects of interest are shown are the regalia and the Mons Meg—the latter a large cannon, which burst, in 1682, with the honour of saluting James, Duke of York, whose absence, however, was more valued than his presence by his loyal subjects some six years before. Scotland, in spite of its Protestantism, remained faithful to him to the end and poured out some of its best blood, after the "Forty-five," for "Bonnie Prince Charlie." The regalia, after lying concealed since the time of the Scottish Union, in 1707, were brought to light in 1818. Strange have been the vicissitudes which these jewels have undergone. Sir Walter Scott considers that the present crown was made by order of Robert Bruce, and that, if so, it must have been worn by his son, David Bruce, in 1331. It was long concealed in the same chest, consisting of a crown, a sceptre, a sword of state, and a silver-gilt rod of office, were lost, or that they had fallen into the hands of some of the mob at the riots which took place in 1707. A search was made, in 1794, in the very room where they were afterwards found, in 1818, but without effect. Although a chest was there, which might possibly have suggested the idea that there was something in it, it was not opened, as the commissioners did not consider that their powers extended so far as to justify them in breaking the lock! In 1818, however, a new commission ventured to force open the long-disused chest in the Crown-room and to bring the regalia to light. Four other relics were subsequently added by William IV., in 1830. One had been bequeathed by Cardinal York, the last descendant of the Stuart family, to George IV. They consist of the collar and badge of the Garter which were presented to Mary's son, James VI., by her loving cousin Elizabeth—the badge of St. Andrew and of the Thistle, together with the coronation ring of Charles I. It makes one sad to see in that dismal room the Ichabod of the proud race of Stuart. Turning, then, from this as well as from the dingy and gloomy room in which Queen Mary gave birth to James VI.—so dark that even her beauty could not have lighted it—we leave the castle, having first glanced from the esplanade at the Old Town, with its many spires, and its canopy of smoke, whence it derives its name of "auld Reekie," lately content to leave to its neighbour the more sweet and pleasing appellation of the modern Athens." It has had its day. Youths will be youths, and flaunt their bright hair before the aged and decayed; but it knows that the time will come when a more advanced civilisation will condemn it to a life-breathing space, and to flee from the poverty and ruin of that which now looks so fair.

Passing from the castle, we are on the long, dirty, and ugly street, which, under the successive names of the Lawnmarket, High-street, and Canongate, leads down to Holyrood Palace. This was, at no very distant period, the main thoroughfare of Edinburgh. It then more comprehended the chief nobility and the rank and fashion of Scotland. Still, on the outsides of some of the miserable and dilapidated mansions, are to be seen the armorial bearings of the proud Earls who ruled like Kings in days of yore. What a change has time wrought! Groups of ragged and barefooted children, and of dirty children lounge upon the steps of doors which once formed the common approach to the flats upon which the best in the city resided. Here and there a mere remnant of the once spacious windows, where once grace and beauty watched the pageantry of Kings and Nobles. From each side of the street there branch out dark and narrow closes or lanes—wynds, Scotice—which we shall explore by-and-by, and fit to have been the scenes of a thousand mysterious transactions and romantic adventures. The whole street has a look of the gloomy closes, such as that in the Rangraving, and one glimpse of the wynds, which we shall explore by-and-by, is enough to make one satisfied with a little less of the romance of the Mrs. Radcliffe school, and a reasonable amount of commonplace comfort and respectability. Some of the most picturesque old houses in this part of the town is that of which we give an Engraving. It is known as Moubray House, and is in the West Bow, and is the head of the old mansions of Edinburgh were in former times. Another building which deserves our notice is the old wooden-fronted house at the head of Halkerstone's wynd, which was the first dwelling-shop of Allan Ramsay, the poet. The shop was marked by the sign of a Mercury. In Bakehouse Close, the branch of St. Cecilia's Hall, now appropriated to Methodist chapel. The house he occupied at a later time was in the same land; and upon the gable-end, upon which fire fix statue has since been erected, on the north side of the Castle Hill.

Passing on to St. Giles's Church we tread upon the figure of a heart, marked out in the stones in the centre of the entrance to the church. Here once stood the far-famed Old Tolbooth, which was called the Heart of Mid-Lothian, and from which Sir Walter Scott derived the name and the scene of his celebrated novel. The massive door was conveyed to Abbotsford in 1817, when this prison was demolished. In the church of St. Giles is now preserved the pulpit-cloth, as to its external features, by its ancient octagonal spire or lantern, which was, by some fortunate chance, preserved in the great fire that criminals, and the humbler dramatis personæ as the tools or the victims of the aristocrats, can hardly surprise; the only really surprising feature in such stories is the outrageous machinery by which results are brought about; and the only really surprising fact in connection with such stories is that their abject folly is tolerated by the otherwise shrewd masses of our population.

But we suspect that the excellent Primate of England has been led astray by a cant word, and by the smart commendations of certain reviewers. We agree with his Grace that the word "sensational" is an awkward and foolish one. It is a piece of Yankee slang, which came over with some Yankee theatrical trash, and which rather conveniently indicated that kind of stage literature which keeps rational people from a theatre but cram it with the foolish. The word, once adopted, obtained a wider significance, and has been of late absurdly applied to all fiction which contains the elements of excitement and of surprise. In this sense, if the word is used for condemnation, its broad-cast application is unfair and absurd. If fiction, prosaic and poetical, is to be proscribed altogether, as in the days of the Puritans, we can understand that proposition. But, if the parable—for what else is an untruth conveying a great truth!—is still to be employed as a means of instruction, the fiction "with a purpose" must be allowed; and if art is to be permitted her creations, which have hitherto been held to elevate and refine, the fiction without a purpose beyond the illustration of art must also be tolerated. And what is either without excitement or surprise? Are we to be remitted to Richardson, with his seven and eight volumes of improving conversation in the old-fashioned "little by inches" form of fiction; and yet even Richardson has occasional recourse to a violent surprise, so exciting, indeed, that no brother would be particularly pleased at hearing his sisters announce that they were going to read "Pamela" or "Clarissa." In Sir Walter Scott to be suddenly cut down at a moment when his novels can be obtained for tenpence each, and sell at that rate by the thousand! Yet, if ever there was a sensationist, the manly and healthy Scott was the man. Who forgets his shudder when the corpse of Kenneth should be stripped and roasted alive, when Amy Robsart fell down the awful murder-hole in the castle, when the head of the Grand Master rolled at the feet of Saladin, when Mowbray and Lord Etherington met for the duel, when Dirk strangled Glossin, and when that preacher and rogue, Bridgenorth, with the cool sledge was driven into the torture-boot? Scott was a sensationalist, and never was the skeleton in the closet more effectively used than in about a dozen of his best works. We fear that it is too late to "bowdlerise" Sir Walter. We might go higher, and what the Archbishop of Canterbury would say if we ate all the marvels which Milton has introduced into his epic but sensation fictions—the roar of the angelic cannon, the hideous species, male and female, the gorgeous pandemonium, the visions that take away one's breath with wonder! Let us all try to elevate our minds of taste, by reading the story of Cain, that ends with a strangulation, boldly said. Why should we live in a fool's paradise, and believe that every man who subscribes to charities, gives the usual entrées at dinner, and speaks courteously to the ladies of his house is a paragon of virtue. With commercial frauds constituted, necessarily, by the failure of the many, more thousands than have ever suffered since civilisation began, the fictionist is exercising more than his right, he is doing his duty in showing, artistically, that all is not gold that glitters.

Our difference with the Archbishop is not in principle, but in degree; and we would add that we entirely concur in much that he said at Holdersfield, and we desire to call general attention to a speech which has the merit of dealing boldly with a secular subject. The value of that speech will not be diminished by the concentration of its too general denunciation into the right focus.

"AFTER THE BATTLE," BY P. H. CALDERON, A.R.A.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

"AFTER THE BATTLE."

THE picture we have engraved will probably be well remembered by visitors to the Royal Academy Exhibition of 1863. It was one of the principal attractions at the Trafalgar-square display in that year of exhibitions; and it was this performance which first made Mr. Calderon widely known to the general public, and won for him most promising young artists. The promise of this picture has since been redeemed by works finer in conception, and such as have placed Mr. Calderon to his recent elections as Associate of the Royal Academy. A few weeks since, after the election took place, we gave a Portrait and biographical notice of this artist; we need not, therefore, now make any further comment upon his career.

The picture next before us we have engraved seems to us to reside in the peculiar felicity of its conception. It is one of those representations of semi-historic and semi-domestic interest which have elevated the class of paintings known as "genre-historique" into popular favour in the English schools, and have reconciled us to the absence of the "grand historical," the mainstay and chief forms of high art. An incident like this shows us the horrors of war, not in the carnage of the battle-field, but in the desolation of a humble home; and while it reminds us that soldiers, even in the full flush of victory, can feel pity, it intensifies the sympathy we have already in the heart. The costumes in this picture take us back to about the period, we may suppose, of Marlborough's campaigns. A battle has raged in and around a Flemish village. The English have been victorious, and are marching through the street of the little place in pursuit of the foe. They find within, however, the entire the deserted battered, and smouldering houses, in search of booty. A party of Croxadiers, some of them already laden with plunder, appear before a cottage, the door open, the side of which may have been smashed in by cannon, and they enter this poor abode, eager to find what they may think last worth securing in this humble tenement. But here they see what at once diverts them from their purpose—a poor little weeping child, scared by even the age when he might have been the occupant of the overturned cradle on whose side he sits; and who has either been left behind by his parents, in the mortal terror of flight, or perhaps, more likely, torn from them, frightened by the cannonading, and on its cessation, has found his way back to his desolate home. Of course, there is not a true soldier who could treat such a child as an enemy, and who would not protect before this helpless and innocent figure. Mr. Calderon may well quote from Shakespeare as a motto for his picture—

Men never spend their fury on a child!

The eldest and most hardened soldier, therefore, is the first to approach the child with the reassuring gentleness of a woman; and we may fancy that we hear him coaxing the little one to lay aside his fears. The soldier's comrades are evidently no less feeling than he in their feeling of compassion. We commend to the reader's examination, as reproduced in the Engraving, the various expressions of interest in their faces, and especially in that of the sympathising drummer-boy, who is himself a mere child. This picture was recently in the collection of Mr. Morley, (from whom we had permission to engrave it), at his gallery, Cornhill.

MUSIC.

The short series of Italian operas at Her Majesty's Theatre terminates this evening. It has been eminently successful, and deservedly: for, though given at a time of the year when such entertainments are generally unusual if not unprecedented, and though the prices of admission have been much reduced, yet the performances have been as careful, complete, and excellent in every respect as if this had been the height of the season. The operas chosen have been "Faust," "Linda," "Lucrezia Borgia," and "Norma," in every one of which the character of the heroine has been sustained by Mdlle. Titiens, the great lyric tragedian of the time. Ever since her first arrival in England Titiens has been the main support of Her Majesty's Theatre, while her every power has been in a state of constant growth and development. Endowed by nature with every physical and mental gift—beauty of form and face, a voice of vast power and the most perfect quality, intelligence, energy, and feeling—she has cultivated herself till she has become the glory of the musical stage, the queen of tragic song. Survey the state of the lyrical drama throughout Europe, and you shall call to mind every female performer who has gained the highest name in Italy, Germany, and France, who is there that can dispute with her the palm with Titiens? We have reason to be glad that her almost constant residence among us for many years has shown that England is the land of her predilection, and that the metropolis has been kind her to this country—admiration and respect on our side, and the pleasant sense of the appreciation of her genius on hers—will not be lost by lastingly. She is domiciled, almost naturalised, among us; she is in the very prime of her life and vigour; the strength of her faculties, and her career promises to be long as well as brilliant. Already her appearances during the past fortnight by far the most remarkable has been Leonora, in Beethoven's "Fidelio"—in which character she heroine on the lyric stage, personated as she never has been by the most illustrious of her previous impersonators. This is to remember the greatest of them—Schuster-Devrient, Malibran, and Cornelius—and he will not omit that Titiens has excelled them all, combining their various beauties, and adding to them certain individuals of nature and feeling which make her picture as fresh as it is captivating or touching. This was thoroughly felt by the audience on both nights of performance; for the enthusiasm of overflowing houses was expressed as vehemently as they were witnessing the pathetic drama for the first time. The other characters were well supported, Santley's Pizarro has never been surpassed, seldom equalled. The part of Marcellina, in "Fidelio," was sung, acted, and sung; and Rossi and Susini—Rocco and Jaquino—though they acted indifferently, were well sung. Mdlle. Titiens is the performer of an opera so full of musical difficulty. Mr. Mapleson deserves the thanks of the public for this very excellent and attractive series of performances.

At the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden, Mr. Macfarren's new opera, "Helvellyn," was produced on Thursday. Of this opera and its performance we shall give some account next week.

A great sensation has been created in Paris by the début, at the Théâtre Lyrique, of a young singer, Mdlle. Nilson, who is described as another Jenny Lind. She appeared in a French version of the "Traviata," was received with enthusiasm, and has been lauded to the echo by the press.

THE THEATRES.

On Wednesday the Olympic reopened with three new pieces, produced under the management of Mr. Horace Wigan. The interior of the theatre has been tastefully redecorated, and the comfort of the audience abundantly provided for. Mr. Wigan began the evening with an address to the public requesting its future efforts to bring consideration. A new comedietta, by Mr. John Oxenford, was then performed, entitled "The Girl I Left Behind Me." The plot and dialogue of this piece were equally weak, though not very novel. Two lovers, parted for seven years, find when they meet again that they are much changed, and Captain Fortescue (Mr. Frank Matthews) that he loves his intended's sister better than herself, and gladly surrenders to her newer acquaintance. Then followed the drama of the evening, one of "thrilling interest," as it might have been called at a theatre of less pretensions, and entitled "The Hidden Hand," adapted from "L'Abîme," of MM. D'Ennery and C. Edmond. It is full of secrets, and develops a most unhappy story. The scene is laid in Wales, and the plot turns on the national dislike of the Saxon. Animated by this motive, Lady Gwyffydd (Miss Bowring) seeks to poison her granddaughter, Muriel (Miss Louise Moore), the child of Lord Penarvon (Mr. Henry Neville), by his second wife (Miss Kate Percy). But she is not here interfere with the rights of Enid (Miss Lydia Foote), the child of his first wife. For some time Lady Penarvon is suspected of the crime; but at length the old lady, who is supposed to be paralyzed, is witnessed in the act of dragging Muriel's cradle by Enid, whose distress is extremely great at having detected her. Enid refuses to name the guilty person; but, offering to drink of the poisoned cup in her grandmother's presence, the old lady's agitation betrays her guilt. Finding all further effort to be vain, Lady Gwyffydd destroys herself, likewise by poison: and so concludes a very dreary play, relieved by two or three excellent situations. A farce by Mr. J. M. Morton, called "My Wife's Bonnet," terminated the evening's entertainment. This farce begins in a quarrel in one of the side boxes about a lady's bonnet, and continues on the stage, where some semi-jealous scenes occur between Mr. Wigan, Mr. Rouse, and his wife (Mr. J. G. Taylor and Miss Melvin). Both the performers were new to us, but both, we should say, succeeded in their parts to the satisfaction of the audience. All three pieces were received with applause; and Mr. Horace Wigan's management, it may be pronounced, has commenced under favourable auspices.

Emulation is now bearing good fruit in theatrical matters, not only with respect to the West-end, but among the Orientals and in the transpontine region. Sadler's Wells has a new burlesque on the subject of "The Forty Thieves," which takes mightily; and the Britannia, Hoxton, has also already acquired a reputation. It is one evidently written to order, and constructed with the whole strength of the company. Messrs. Henry Leslie and Nicholas Rowe are the authors of the piece, which contains its merits and its demerits. Although, we believe, original, this drama is formed upon the French model. It is divided into five tableaux, and has five acts. The first opens in London, and shows the relation between two Jews, Aaron Grieveson, an orange girl (Miss Paincefort), and the other, Elias, a wanderer (Mr. Alfred Wigan). The latter is in love with Aaron's daughter, Judith (Miss Culham), who is poor, and whose child still lives; and Underwood, a rich old Jew, is her suitor for Jane, has strong motives to wish her dead. Underwood accordingly hires little Jacob (Miss Fanny Reynolds) from Abraham and Lilias Fryer, who is now the husband of Jane, and seeks to drown her in the Thames. Jacob, however, is saved by the indeed suits, but Jane is at hand to save her, and by her cries brings the watchmen to the spot. She is about to denounce the villain, when he threatens to revenge her denunciation upon Sir Tyrone Fryer, and she then compels her silence. Ultimately, Jane leaves her home, and the house of John Fryer, Esq., of Penzance, in Cornwall, one of the Grange. Uriah is his steward; and here Fryer attends the Christmas festivities, accusing the steward of having taken his wife and niece away. But Underwood appears, and tells Fryer that his wife is dead, and thus causes him to be arrested. He is sent to Portland as a convict. Mr. Sleigh, Q.C., is counsel for the defence, and Jane, by her testimony, obtains a pardon and a reprieve. A highly passionate scene takes place between Jane in the Portland quarries, the result of which is that Uriah impeaches Sir Tyrone Fryer, and has already employed the engraver to forge the note. The scenes in the convict settlement are very good, and the prisoners are a motley group of knaves and other accessories of an equally literal character. The scenery is finely painted by Mr. Grieve and his brother Albert. The characters, which are various, are admirably sustained by the company. The two principals find adequate representation in Mr. Anderson and Mr. Sleigh—the latter of whom is a performer of much promise.

At the Strand, Mr. Byron's burlesque of "Mazeppa" has been revived, with such changes in the dialogue as were expedient to convert it into a burlesque upon the drama which is now in course of representation at Astley's. The main alteration consists of a parody on the song of "Mazeppa," which will reference to Miss Meaken as "Mazeppa,"

Whose classical style of dress has not Much troubled the sewing-machines of late.

The same may be said of Miss Raynham's, but "with a difference;" for in the "Mazeppa" of the latter performance the sewing-machine will be less sight entirely of her costume. Mentally, of course, we cannot but fail to appreciate the poor Robson in the same character; nor can we help supposing that the country cousins of Mr. Paul Bedford and Mr. Drohisoke (Mr. D. James). Her performance is in all respects very creditable. Mr. Clarke, a professional novice, plays the part of Ivan humorously supported, and the scenery and costumes picturesque and rich.

Mdlle. Beatrice, at the Haymarket, has essayed a second character, and with increased success. The part of Mrs. Haller in the "Stranger" is one in which she can display a high degree of expression. Her accent, however, becomes more pronounced in the drawing-room scenes than it should be in the last act. Her scene with the children is remarkably pathetic. In the early part of the performance Mr. Howe's sang the arms of the Stranger, so that the certain falls on their reconciliation. Mr. Howe's singing of the ballad was the best part of the evening's conclusion; but, artistically, we believe that it is the natural result of the performance of this drama, at all events, has established itself on the English stage, and we anticipate a long run for the piece.

A new drama was produced at the St. James's on Saturday—"a domestic story," entitled "Sybilla; or, Step by Step." By Mr. Palgrave Simpson, and entitled "Sybilla; or, Step by Step." Sybilla (Miss Charles Mathews) is a Danish maiden, engaged as barmaid to a tavern near Copenhagen, and who is very attentive to Nils Fleming, a young Nils Fleming, a timber merchant (Mr. C. Mathews). He becomes enamoured of Sybilla, and proposes to her. Sybilla, standing at her window, and of one Joachim Burke (Mr. Frank Matthews), who is a suitor for her hand. Joachim is the innkeeper's brother, and secretly loves Sybilla himself. Nils, however, is rich, and Sybilla's fortunes are now in the ascendant, and carries off Sybilla as his bride. Sybilla, however, is very fickle, and soon deserts Nils for Joachim, who has an objection to his own headwriting being seen. But Sybilla makes up his wife's signature of marriage, thereupon informing Wilfred that she has attained the consent to her step. Nils and Joachim are now also jealous; and, to add to the perplexity, the Count Oxenstierna, a professional gambler, arrives at the inn. In the conclusion, Sybilla proposes to place herself under his guardianship, and, by the assistance of Nils, Joachim, and Wilfred, she is enabled to play a political enemy, and demands his handwriting. Nils holds the document at Sybilla's disposal; but Wilfred, suddenly entering, seizes and destroys it; whereupon, Sybilla denounces him as a deserter. Wilfredston now sends her a letter, complying with her conditions, and Sybilla announces that she has taken the decisive step. In the third act, Sybilla is domiciled with the Count, and is in the full winning fortunes. The two are reconciled. Ultimately, Wilfred comes to her with a letter from the young King Christian (Mr. F. Robinson) now appears as her sovereign, and has come from the Court to Sybilla's dwelling. She finds papers that convict Joachim and the Count of the treason for which they are condemned to death. A professional Jew impresses ment, but who is now set free. Complicated as the plot is, the piece is well supported by the excellent company at this house that the new play was received with unequivocally received, and the curtain fell to decided applause.

The Pekin Gazette publishes a report from the Chinese Government on the extinction of the rebellion, in which the Emperor thanks the Viceroy, and more needful that thanks he offered to the gods for their assistance. Wherefore he commands that a temple in honour to them be erected on the spot by the different gods, and to report to us."

The Oxford and Thames Railway, which is fifteen miles in length, was opened for traffic on Monday week. It is a single line, on the broad gauge, starting from the Great Western two miles south of Oxford, crossing the River Thames near Kennington Long Bridge, and having intermediate stations at Littlemore and Wheatley, and affords direct communication from Oxford to Wycombe, Aylesbury, and Maidenhead.

Letters from Tangier mention that the Lithuas of Sous Company has just put into practice in Morocco an ingenious method of procuring workmen. Knowing the zeal of the Mahommedans to perform the pilgrimage to Mecca, the company has announced in the streets of Tangier and has other towns of the Empire that "all workmen who shall have worked a year on the canal will be taken gratuitously to Mecca to perform their devotions at the tomb of the Prophet."

MEMBERS OUT OF PARLIAMENT.

IF no one else thinks so, the sub-guardians of the Conservative party are clearly under a hope that an apprehension of an early dissolution of Parliament. A few days ago there was a statement, which was positive, that there would be no further promotions beyond the day to which the last ceremony of that kind had relegated the recess, and that a general election was to burst suddenly on the country in order which is more favourable to the supporters of Ministers than that which will come into play next January will be. It certainly seemed rather sharp practice for a Cabinet to take such a course; and it turned out that the idea was given by the Conservative "impregnables," who really conceived that such a dodge might be the happy conception of such a thing rather rumour an idea that in a similar manner. Any, more—even if the rumour was groundless, as well it is to oppose Mr. Colden at the next election, and who might be running in the dark, smooth tone of confidence. With him came two of the three Conservative members for South Lancashire, and patted him and encouraged him to grow, until Mr. Colden might almost have heard him at his ancestral gentleman's estate in Sussex. Mr. Algernon Egerton is, judging from his career as a member, just the kind of man to aid in such an electioneering feat, which is remarkable for its boldness. Probably few members have displayed such ease and self-confidence, as he has, in adapted themselves so readily to the business of their position. He was returned for the county for the first time in 1859, when Lord Derby's Government dissolved; and he had the courage, at a new member of a comparatively young man, to undertake to move the address in answer to the Speech from the Throne. He performed it very well in a simple, a coolness, which, far, very far, removed from effrontery, might have been taken to have been the result of Parliamentary practice and experience. Since then he has assumed all the position of a man in paying tribute to the memory of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. It may be that there was lurking in his mind some reference to a certain occasion which is said to prevent—but in the next so-called Conservative Government Mr. Disraeli will be a link in which to draw Mr. Gladstone into a moderate Liberal Cabinet. Any way, Sir Rochdale a challenge has been deliberately offered to Mr. Colden; and, as he is going to his borough in a few days, we may look for the fun by the way to the proceedings of the organisation against him.

The signs are that they have stated as stirring the Tories has again operated in Essex, where the cry of "Corn" has been shouted at the top of the somewhat puny voices of several of the members for that county. Probably, however, that is every one knows anything of the rising hopes of the Conservative party, is familiar with the principal leaders of it. Mr. Miller, who has rotated quotations from that not too recondite repertory from which, according to certain ultra-Conservative gentlemen seldom stray; with his quotations from that not too recondite repertory from which, according to certain ultra-Conservative gentlemen seldom stray; with his unconsciousness of talking commonplace which is so characteristic of his honourable colleague, Mr. Miller has long cultivated himself; grandeur, and spontaneity in vain. But on this occasion he outdid himself; grandeur, or more grandeur, according to fancy, than ever; pumping out heavy platitudes with unwonted energy and overpowering Essex men with essentially Essex wit. The venue being Colchester, it behoved Mr. Miller to be especially humble their choice to the dignity of that borough. If we are not mistaken, Mr. Miller is an active member of the Metropolitan Board of Works, and probably he reserved his oratory for that assembly, as none will accuse him of lofty pretensions and loquacious in the house; although, no doubt, a man of his Parliamentary experience could have delivered a speech worthy of saving of quiet members from despair and which is comprehended in the conviction that he is flattered for his little quarter of an hour, Mr. Papillon, who ought to be light and airy in his flights, but who, so far as Parliament is concerned, may be said to be still in the chrysalis state; for he has, to our knowledge, ever yet imped his wings in that breezy atmosphere. And Captain Archdale, who, like Mr. Papillon, is a young man of parts but slightly ungrammatical speaker, who takes strong but rather sagacious views, and who can cut many a pointed truth and often an epigrammatic phrase. Somehow, he seems to think he has peculiarly adapted to represent a place like Harwich, which has always been famous for not requiring members so much as men in the choice of members; for, though he professes Conservatism as his politics, there is an air of it which is suggestive of the hope he suggests that he would not be the person to vote black to be white on any party question. Altogether, this rally in Essex was effective and pronounced enough, considering that it was rather in the nature of a skirmish, as to that county the Tories have actively set up a candidate.

An essay has been delivered by Mr. Grant Duff, at Elgin. Curious that a gentleman who is really versed in philosophical politician, and is not devoid of originality of ideas, which he expresses with a special command of language, singular correctness of diction, and often with very pointed illustrations—should occasionally fall into the thought beyond strict Parliamentary rule—who is fluent of speech in a physical sense, and has been assiduous to master the mere mechanism of speaking, and so always to seem to deliver an elaborately-prepared paper, pronounced under the fashion that is peculiar to the compositions of young gentlemen of immature age. Mr. Grant Duff has indeed to give him that rough-and-readiness which is essential to the very highest class of Parliamentary oratory. He is really enough in a literary sense, and he is rough enough in another; but the combination does not produce the exactly right result, and therefore he has not achieved the success at which he has evidently aimed.

When the two chief whippers-in of the Ministry come before their constituencies the word probably expects to hear something worth listening to. But this is a mistake. Perhaps there are no functionaries in the world whose special business it so much is to say nothing if they spoke for hours, and do exactly what Mr. Adam and Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen have done in addressing their friends in their respective boroughs of Lewes and Sandwich.

The Brazilian Ministry has been completed by the appointment of Senor Dias Vieira as Minister for Foreign Affairs.

A sharper took passage in an emigrant-ship from Bremen to Baltimore, and, convincing the emigrants that gold was not current in the United States, succeeded in buying up their greenbacks nearly all the gold in the possession of the passengers, to the amount of 30 per cent. The sharper cleared upwards of 3000 dollars by his roguery.

We have been shown a miniature model at work of a pair of Penn's patent trunk-engines, made by Mr. Thomas Smith, modeller, of Walnut-tree-walk, Lambeth. The weight of these model engines is 120 grains less than that of a silver threepenny piece, and they stand on less space than a threepenny piece. Nevertheless, they can be worked at from twenty revolutions up to 20,000 revolutions per minute.

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

THE NEW PLANET, discovered by M. Tempel, at Marseilles, at eight p.m., on Sept. 30, has been named after Terpsichore, the muse of dancing, who appears to have been unaccountably overlooked in relation to the heavenly bodies. Since the great increase in the number of these small planets, and the difficulty in the determination of their co-ordinates, observers will find it useful to announce their discoveries with greater reserve than hitherto.

A MACHINE FOR CALCULATING AND CHARTING STARS, invented by Mr. G. W. Emph, of Dudley Observatory, U.S., is described and figured by him in the American Journal of Science, No. 113. He believes that his apparatus is the first contrivance to represent mechanically, by mechanical means, the right ascension and declination of a star at the same instant. We must refer our readers to the valuable memoir for its details of construction and application of Mr. Emph's ingenious idea.

AN ASSYRIAN CHRONOLOGICAL CLAY TABLET, in the British Museum, is thus translated by Mr. H. F. Talbot, and printed, with others, in the Transactions of the Royal Society of Literature. It is a list of the Assyrian Eponymi, or Kings of Nations, King of Assyria, to whom Nabo and Tasmit's have given a long-lasting care and have established a firm throne. These tablets of elementary instruction which, among the kings who went before me, were established by Ismi-dagon, King of Assyria, for the increase of rules, kind of Learning. I pronounced the words with my breath; (then) I wrote them upon tablets; I corrugated them, I inscribed them; and we for the instruction of the Teachers I placed them within my palace.

A BROWN TINT OF IRON AND STEEL is given in Prussia in the following manner:—In as small a quantity of water as possible (about four or five gents) dissolve an equal quantity of butter of antimony, or chloride of antimony. Add to this solution the same possible quantity of hydrochloric acid (or it is in the proportion of this acid that is found the success of the operation), and one part of gallic acid. With this solution, after it has cooled, it has been moistened with this liquid the iron or steel objects are rubbed for several times, being left to dry in the air between each coating. Finally, the metal is rubbed with boiled linseed oil. The tint is more or less deep in proportion to the number of coatings. When the desired tint appears, the oil is left on the metal, it is, at the same time, preserved from the action of rust.

THE PHOTOMETER, invented by M. LAMBERT BALLICA has been subjected to experiment by M. Carey, and the results communicated to the Academy of Sciences at Paris. He finds that when the light of a standard candle or lamp is taken away from the body of the insect, and placed on a glass and dried, it immediately loses its phosphorescent light, and as soon as the light of this matter is placed under a little water, its luminosity returns. He hopes that the quality may be considered as that of the light of the glow-worm, and has analysed by the spectrum apparatus, since no other substance, not even phosphorus, begins to shine when plunged in water and has not been exposed to it when dried. In the Lampyris Italica the light is not equal and tranquil, as in the Lampyris noctiluca, but is intermittent. With each appearance and not exactly to the pulsations of the heart, which are, however, the work of the blood, by means of the breathing the luminosity is given, giving the impression of a dazzling brilliancy.

ACTION OF CARBONIC OXIDE UPON IRON.—M. Margueritte, to a paper recently read before the Academy of Sciences, concludes that pure carbon (the diamond) and carbonic oxide can transform iron into steel, and that carbonic acid by its combustion can bring the steel to the state of pure (or cementation). At another meeting of the Academy, M. Caron expressed his dissent from his opinion, and from the first cause of carbonic oxide. Some of these two substances is very insignificant and even still rather precise. Experiments made in melting iron in crucibles, surrounded by coal, have given conclusions if he repeated the experiments with the same results. He is not forging and the melting terrible in which it is suspected when it is worked so as to retain the nature and quality of steel.

TOOTH-ACHE QUONE.—In a letter in the Times Dr. R. H. Allcott gives the result of his experience in regard to the best preparations for this purpose. He discusses the question of laudanum and chloroform that it is unadvisable when morphia is employed. He says that if common writing paper be used, as what is specially recommended, the morphia enters the paper, the rose invariably discolour in irregular patches, that in distinct isolated dots of brown minute crystalline particles, which dissolve readily in non-uniform surface. He concludes, that belladona paper, saturated with a solution of extract of belladonna and dried, is the best form of paper for the most effective test we possess. The formula of its preparation is as follows:—"Take of pure white filtering paper, thirty-six grains; extract of belladonna, three grains; this in a sparkle mortar, and add gradually six ounces of boiling water. The papers are to be saturated with the solution, and then thoroughly dried out of contact with the external air, and preserved in close tin boxes.

The Town Council of Jedburgh, on Monday, conferred the freedom of the burgh on Sir David Brewster, who is a native of the town. Jedburgh lays on its burgeoned arms the names of Robert Burns, Sir Walter Campbell, statesman and Lord High Chancellor of England; and Sir Henry Jardine, M.P.

The Poor-Law Board has issued a circular giving suggestions to the local boards for carrying out the Act passed last Session for the relief of the houseless poor in the metropolitan district. As the only way of using the measure is to be distributed over the metropolitan unions, as the administration of the relief is left to the local boards, and as the general measures for the maintenance of the parochial poor. The Act is intended to provide for destitute persons, wanderers, and destitute only in matter where they come from, the one claim to attention being want. The new legislation consists of the following points:—1. Power is given to provision for the parochial purpose. The relief is to extend from night, which in the case of night is to be overnight, and will consist of a lodging place, with enough but sufficient covering, warmth, and good ventilation. The food to be supplied to the destitute consists of bread, with tea and occasional soup, but not such as, either in quantity or quality, would tend to increase the number of applicants or encourage persons to seek relief as a means of gain for this relief by the able-bodied is a task of work suited to the age, strength, and capacity of the pauper, and likely to assist him in finding work for the able-bodied labour.

For several months past works of reclamation have been carried on on the Essex coast, at St. Peter's Head, in the parish of Bradwell, and recently traces of Roman occupation were found. The Rev. Mr. Bramston communicated the fact to the Archæological Institute, Mr. Thomas Parnell, secretary, proceeded to the spot and found specimens of a solid masonry, consisting of regular ashlar, alternating with rows of bonding-tiles. In the field where the excavations have been made the Roman Road to Colchester is said to have been—of St. Peter-on-the-Wall, built of Roman materials; and this fact, coupled with the notice of the antiquarian Columella and other writers, leads to the inference that this is the lost Othona of the "Notitia," the station of the Tribune, who, as the Roman Count of the Saxon Shore, was specially charged with the protection of this part of the coast against the piratical Saxons. In the adjacent fields have been turned up coins, pottery, and other doubtless of mediæval interment—and numerous vestiges of the earlier occupation, consisting of quantities of Samian and Castor ware, and coins of the reigns of the Lower Empire. It is thought that the remains now brought to light were erected by Allectus after the overthrow of Carausius in A.D. 293, and to Camden's "Britannia," mentions "a huge ruin of a thick wall" having been seen there; and small Roman coins are frequently found in the vicinity of the parish, Bradwell, is probably a corruption of "Broad Wall."

At a meeting of South Staffordshire colliers held at Coseley last Saturday, it was agreed to end the strike, which has been continued for seventeen weeks. One objection urged was that the men would have to work the 4000 men at Oldbury and West Bromwich till they got the five shillings a day which they demanded, but a large majority were in favour of ending it. Two speakers at the meeting said their privations had been intense, and with deep sentiments they declared that it was time for the men to submit, and to be forced them to yield. The district is quite peaceable, and the soldiers have been withdrawn from it. A mass meeting of the miners was held on Sedgley Hills, West Bromwich, on Monday. There was a marked diminution in the number as well as in the enthusiasm of the meeting held on the previous Monday, in which the old arguments in favour of the strike were reproduced, and the men advised to remain fast and they would gain their end. The remarks of the speakers at the meeting and the foundries of the Coalbrookdale Company. Passing through a pretty station, with long white platforms, perched on an embankment 60 ft. above the turnpike road, we then skirt the edge of a steep wooded cliff by a series of sharp curves trenched out of the hillside, and we are carried over a portion of the ironworks and the great reservoir of the same company on a fine curved viaduct of twenty-six arches, which has been three years under construction. Further on the railway passes through another reservoir confined by massive walls on each side of the line; till, emerging from deep cuttings, in which is exhibited a section of the great coal-field of Shropshire, we ascend to the summit level and junction-station at Lightmoor by a gradient of 1 in 50, which extends over a greater part of the line. Such is the Coalbrookdale Railway, which was opened to public traffic on Tuesday.

It is singular that the bridge which forms the subject of our Illustration—the most recent and one of the most enterprising works of its class—is within sight of the first iron bridge that was constructed in England—one which was constructed by the same ironmasters in 1779, and which has given a name to the rising and important town of Ironbridge, on the banks of the Severn.

Our Engraving is executed from an excellent photograph taken by Mr. W. Fall, photographer, of Market-square, Ironbridge, Salop.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

With the exception of several parcels of bar silver having been disposed of for Holland, and of Mexican dollars for China and Japan, the transactions in bullion have been unimportant. In gold the home trade is fair, yet there is scarcely any demand for bullion for export purposes; hence most of the gold at hand has been disposed of to the Bank of England. In notes rather limited business has been restored, dealers in national stocks have increased their purchases, and prices, almost generally, have been on the advance.

The supply of money in the general discount market has further increased. The demand for accommodation has fallen off somewhat materially.

The shortage of importance has taken place in the value of money on the Continent.

The Council for India have disposed of £500,000 in bills on the various Presidencies, at prices ranging from 1s. 11¼d. per rupee for Calcutta and Madras; and to 1s. 11¾d. on Bombay. The applications were 3½ times the amount offered.

In the Stock Exchange on Wednesday business was transacted within without the dividend.

There was an amount of business doing in the Consol market, on Monday, at enhanced quotations. Consols, for Money, realised 90¾ to ¾; for the Account, 90¾ to ⅞; New Three per Cents, 91¼ to ½; Reduced, 91¼; Exchequer Bills, 5s. to 2s. pm.; Bills, 2s. to 5s. dis.; Bank Stock was 229; India Stock, 214; and the Three per Cents, 92. The market for the Confederate Loan has ruled very quiet, and nominally; dealings has taken place in prices, the quotation being 70 to 72 for the new Confederate scrip, and 72 to 74 for the old. THE FURNISHING OF BED-ROOMS.
HEAL and SON have observed for some time that it would be advantageous to their customers to see a much larger selection of Bed-room Furniture than is usually displayed, and that to judge properly of the style and effect of the various woods, the Bed-steads and other articles of Furniture should be placed in separate apartments. They have therefore erected large and additional Show-rooms, by which they are enabled not only to extend their show of Bed-room Furniture, but to arrange Bed-steads and Bed-room Furniture, beyond what they believe has ever been attempted before, in such a manner as to show the real character of keeping—subject of course to the limitations of furniture in different styles.
Japanned Bed Goods may be seen in complete suites of five or six different colours, some of them light and ornamental, suitable for a lady's bed-room, others of a more massive character, for a gentleman's. Deal, Oak, and Walnut, are also arranged in separate rooms, so that customers are able to see the effect of it would appear in their own rooms. A Suite of very superior Gothic Bed-room Furniture is likely to be kept in stock, and from time to time new and select furniture will be added to the Show-rooms.
Bed Furniture are fitted to the Bed-steads in large numbers, so that a complete assortment may be seen and the effect of any particular pattern ascertained, as it would appear in the bed-room.
A very large stock of Bedding (Heal and Son's original trade in 1810) always on hand.
The stock of Mahogany Goods for the better Bed-rooms, and Japanned Goods for plain and servants' use, is very greatly increased. The same stock is arranged in eight rooms, and extends over 120 ft. in length, and two large ground floors—the whole forming as complete an assortment of Bed-room Furniture as they think can possibly be desired.
Every attention is paid to the manufacture of the Cabinet-work, and they have just erected large workshops expressly adapted for this purpose, that the manufacture may be under their own immediate inspection.
Their bedding trade receives their personal and constant attention, every article being made on the premises.
They particularly call attention to their Patent Spring Mattress, the Sommier Elastique Portatif. It is portable, durable, and elastic, and is the best Spring Mattress yet produced.

THE NEW LORD MAYOR OF LONDON.

IN accordance with the annual custom of this Journal at the time of the inauguration of a new civic reign, we have engraved the portrait of the new Lord Mayor of London. Mr. Warren Stormes Hale, head of the firm of Messrs. Hale and Sons, candle-manufacturers, of Queen-street, Cheapside, was elected by the Livery, on Thursday, Sept. 29, to preside over their municipality for the ensuing year. There were seven other aldermen who had not passed the chair, and who were eligible for the mayoralty in their turn, but Mr. Hale came first in the order of seniority, having been made an Alderman of Coleman-street Ward in the year 1856, after previously serving as deputy of that ward, and having served the office of Sheriff in 1858. He has been a member of the Court of Common Council during the long period of thirty-nine years, and has rendered himself especially useful in the management of the City of London Schools; having been chairman of the committee by which those schools were established twenty-seven years ago, and having continued, without intermission, to superintend their affairs.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE DUKE OF NEWCASTLE.

THE funeral of the late Duke of Newcastle took place on Thursday week. On the previous day his body lay in state for several hours in the ante-room of the library at Clumber. The room was hung with black; and on a raised platform, with lighted tapers in large gilt standards on each side, was the coffin, covered with a rich black silk pall, on which was embroidered the Duke's coat of arms, and the motto "Loyauté n'a honte" (loyalty is not ashamed), a motto very applicable to a certain passage in the Duke's life in 1854-5. The lid of the coffin was studded with gilt cyphers, and on it was a breastplate with a coronet above and below, the star of the Garter being wrought at the foot. The inscription was as follows:—"Henry Pelham Pelham-Clinton, Duke of Newcastle, Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the county of Nottingham, Lord Warden of the Stannaries of Devon and Cornwall, Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, and one of her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council. Born May 22, 1811. Died Oct. 18, 1864."

THE RIGHT HON. WARREN STORMES HALE, THE NEW LORD MAYOR OF LONDON.

On the day of the funeral there were many signs of this mournful occasion in the neighbouring towns of Worksop and Retford, as well as in the villages for some distance around. Every shop in Worksop was closed, and every private house had the blinds drawn down. Most of the houses and shops at Retford were also closed; from Retford Tower and Bothamsall Tower flags were flying half-mast high; and the bells of Worksop, Bothamsall, West Drayton, Gainsten, Elksley, East Markham, and Markham Clinton tolled from ten to two. The tenantry, cottagers, and friends of the late Duke thronged the house and grounds; but, perhaps, one of the most touching sights in the hall was a group of schoolgirls from Hardwick, fed and clothed by the late Duke, whose anxiety to catch a glimpse of the coffin of their benefactor and whose deep emotion were remarked by all. The funeral procession, which left Clumber House about half-past eleven o'clock, was composed as follows:—A mourning coach, drawn by two horses, conveying Mr. Gilbert, the late Duke's house steward; Mr. Scott, the farm bailiff; the agent's clerk; and Mr. Latham. The late Duke's carriage, closed, drawn by a pair of horses, coachmen and footmen. The tenantry on horseback, headed by the head keepers. The Worksop forester. Tenants in carriages:—Messrs. C. S. Barnsley, T. F. A. Barnsley, John Champion, W. E. Watson, John Whall, H. Cottam, E. Hodgkinson, W. Wilkinson, J. Garside. Another Forester, on horseback, heading a procession of 500 tenantry, on horseback, all wearing mourning. Mourning-coaches conveying the chaplain of the late Duke and several of the neighbouring clergymen; the solicitor to his Grace and his medical attendants; his agents and the managers of his estates. Then came the pall-bearers, eight in number, selected from the tenantry, whose families have been for centuries connected with the estate. Then followed the hearse, drawn by six horses, the trappings displaying the escutcheon of the family. Eight under-bearers walked alongside, selected from cottage tenants. The first mourning coach following the hearse contained the Earl of Lincoln (now Duke of Newcastle), Lords Arthur and Albert Pelham-Clinton, sons of the late Duke, and his Grace the Duke of Hamilton. In the next coach were Sir Cornwallis Ricketts, Bart., and Captain D'Eyncourt, R.N., brothers-in-law of the late Duke; Sir Rodney Mundy, and Lord Foley, cousins of the late Duke. The next contained Lord de Tabley, the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Chancellor of the Exchequer, executor of the late Duke, and Lord Harris. The rest of the procession was composed of the servants of the late Duke and a vast number of tenantry and labourers. From Chamber to Markham Clinton is about eight miles, served by the finny weather from attending it by as long a train of respect to one whose memory will long live in their hearts as a good landlord, and an affable, amiable nobleman. The procession reached Markham Clinton at three o'clock. The funeral service was then performed, and the body was lowered into the vault. The Rev. Mr. Reynolds, Vicar, read the opening sentences over the grave, and the lesson was read at the head of the grave by the Rev. A. Douglas Sandby, the late Vicar, and the rest of the service by the Rev. R. Douglas Fyrse Clinton. Among the clergy present were also the Rev. H. Butterfield (Retford), J. Chapman (Hinkley), Hicks (Bolsworth), Dr. Bramhall (Markham), Reed (Ollerton), Marsh (Tuxford), and Rev. Mr. Hayes (Haughton). The church at Markham Clinton was built specially for the family of the late Duke, who died in 1794. It is a long-place there are more than thirty vaults constructed for the reception of the bodies of the Clinton family. The ceremony was over at a quarter past three, and the procession then commenced its journey homewards, all the children of the late Duke were present. We may observe that of Lord Edward Clinton, who is in Canada with the Rifle Brigade, and Lady Susan Vane Tempest.

THE MAGAZINES.

It is long since the Cornhill has fired off so great a gun as the commencement of Mr. Wilkie Collins's "Armadale," and longer still since we have read anything of such forcible and unmistakable power from the pen of this master of the engrossing school of melodramatic Collins's usual Rembrandt style of preponderating shadow, violently contrasted with a few stray gleams of limelight and nature; our curiosity will be rendered the plaything of a series of surprises, our sympathies continually led away on false scents, and we may judge from this first instalment, the whole programme will be carried out with a vigour which will assure the reader of its essentials, the spirit of the work will be maintained, and however widely improbable the strange episode which it is the purpose of these chapters to develop may be little extenuation will be vouchsafed. The opening scene of fettering the attention with the strongest grasp, but in all its salient features Mr. Collins is as far as ever from meriting the question of an artist, he has lost nothing of his consummate dexterity as a craftsman. "Wives and Daughters" is, as usual, full of quiet interesting, but scarcely up to the standard; indeed, these chapters constitute one of those intervals of quiescence which are inevitable in all but short novels, while the scenes are being shifted and the story is gradually passing into unfolding interest. The heroine, in fact, has not appeared in uncongenial stepmother, for whom the stage is being got ready, and we expect to see the ethics and economics of that peculiar relationship exposed by the hand of a master and skill. "Mobile Cane Blackbeard in England" is a useful and timely if not exhaustive article on the subject, as it relates to gun-cotton, and which we the improvement which has been effected in the manufacture. The writer views of "A Tell-tale Stone in Social Science Discussion" considers the subject in a peculiar vein, "Farm Labourers" is a well-studied and full of humour. "The Scottish Colonel Gordon's Exploits in China" is a brief narrative of the remarkable manner in which English valour and administrative skill came to the rescue of the effete empire of China and its pusillanimous formidable rebellion which threatened to overwhelm it. The writer has in making soldiers of the Chinese was an eminently practical one, and for organisation, and his military ability. The world will also bear more of his courage was the sole mode of gun-boats, as in America, The most striking paper in a very Macmillan is Mr. Christie's account of the famous club of "Apostles of Cambridge, called forth by a disparaging allusion in a recent number of Fraser. Mr. Christie is an apostle himself, and his reminiscences are distinguished by a cordial appreciation of the merits of his fellow-members. The paper is a pretty copious account of the which does him much credit, and is the work of a true judge of the general tenure of the painters' genius, he rightly considers the occasional sublimity of Turner as the result of chaos of darkness and confusion. Such discrimination is the one thing wanting in Mr. Gilchrist's laborious and really fascinating biography. In writing about the Brontë sisters and Mr. Dicey can account of Schubert's genius. Mr. Palgrave's account of the Cornish dialect, and many others, are also enumerated among the distinguished "Apostles, of whose conversation we have had a specimen in the present number. "William Blake" in Fraser must be a review of Mr. Gilchrist's book, and not of Blake's poetry and designs. The writer does not seem to think that extraordinary painters' writers very capable of Blake's character as an artist; but the essay seems renders him a fair judge of the general tenure of the painters' mind, and, in so far as it goes, is a very good one. Of Blake's genius, he rightly considers the occasional sublimity as the result of chaos of darkness and confusion. Such discrimination is the one thing wanting in Mr. Gilchrist's laborious and really fascinating biography. In writing about the Brontë sisters and Mr. Dicey can do little more than the general opinion of the press. Mr. Dicey can fully realise delineations of mental struggle. The article on "Iron and Steel" is a timely and valuable one, and is rather lighter and more readable than the hothouse growth of the other articles.

The Victoria Magazine seems to have a bright, if homely, flower of the fields contains some good contributions. The most noteworthy is a pretty fairy tale by the Dean of Carlisle, entitled "The Three Wishes," and a pleasant admiration which it is refreshing to encounter in a review. The contribution of the number is light and agreeable; "My Latest Vacation Excursion" is a bill of indictment against the Germans for pitilessly dirty, bad air, and the natural consequences of stupidity. It is easy to make, and is the natural consequence of by dwelling exclusively upon its weak points, and we can agree with most obvious to a town tourist, as to the dirt and bad air. We know anything about good society in Germany, but it has been careful much of their weight by the feeling of political irritation which has prevailed for some time. The same remark applies to the paper on Captain Cheeney, in a querulous outbreak of animosity against everything American. Cornelius O'Dowd's contribution is remarkable for the assertion that Cavour always looked forward to a reconciliation with Austria as the consummation of his policy, and affords a good anecdote of an Irishman's exclamation on being bound over to keep the peace towards all her Majesty's subjects, "Then Heaven help the first foreigner I meet!"

Fraser is not so good as usual this month, but contains two important articles—a rebuke of Dr. Pusey for his impatience of legal precision and misconception of the functions of a court, and a highly interesting account of the system of peasant proprietorship in the south of France, which the writer considers greatly preferable to that of large farms, as regards influence on the well-being of the population. He says nothing of the incumbrances of the system of these small estates, which have always understood to constitute the most serious drawback to the apparent prosperity of the owners. The public attention is directed to the contributions of a new and most extremely acceptable. There is a rather good sensation story, "Wood Nymphs," which begins well, but terminates in a very lame conclusion.

Temple Bar maintains its character for cleverness—a character especially merited by Mr. Yates's Dutch story, which we, for our part, have found much more readable than Miss Braddon's. The novel is of the sensational class; and, so long as the invention is fertile, and the incidents holds out, the reader is pretty well disposed to be interested. The anecdotes of "Military Occupations in Ireland" will not want for curious readers, and Marie Antoinette's necklace is told yet again in a very interesting fashion.

The St. John's Magazine is very readable, but has no contribution of especial merit.

The prime attraction in the Dublin University is, as usual, "Uncle Sam," which, as may generally be relied upon to convey a high tone of humour, is more than usually powerful in the present number; and this instalment is more fertile in surprises and provocatives to laughter than any of its predecessors. Though, indeed, the curtain of mystery that has been gradually drawing up, would seem to be complete, while the thrill without that clumsy bogy Dudley Costello, we are disappointed. Mrs. Bellamy is one of the pleasantest of the contributions. The interlocutor is a Mr. Neale, who "Is Love Eternal?" and "Sir Ludovic" are very gorgeous and stirring stories, which "It Is Written" is a very similar writer's next, thirty years ago, to succeed with the pictured imaginings of the third story.

The Train of Mr. Dickens's magazine is much better than usual. Good Words is up to its usual mark, the progress of scientific discovery, and Dr. Guthrie's Sketches are varied and entertaining. The contributions of The Quiver commence with a story, and are entertaining. The contributions of The Quiver commence with a story, and are entertaining. The contributions of The Quiver commence with a story, and are most important is a powerful and highly-wrought representation, by M. G. Köller, of Philippine Welser obtaining pardon of Ferdinand I., Emperor of Germany, for her morganatic marriage to his son Ferdinand, Archduke of the Tyrol, together with an acknowledgement of the legitimacy of her children. M. E. Frémiet's "Gorilla Lesson" is not a very good example of this generally incomparable painter. The strenuous attitude of the girl bending over her task is very true to nature, but the model is unattractive and the colour poor. M. Diverger approaches near the last-named painter when at his best in two pictures, similar in subject, called "Granny's Helper," a little girl threading a needle for her grandame; and "The Offering," a child depositing in the church-box a paper containing money, and perhaps the request for one prayer for the soul "Devotion" and "The First Step," by M. De Jonghe, though not free from the flatness and chalky colour characteristic of many of this artist's works, has a quiet tone and keeping too seldom found in English pictures. There are also pictures by Messrs. Van Kuik, De Vos-Schenker, sen., Verschuur, Leonard, H. Schlesinger, Poitevin, and others.

More than ordinary pressure on our space this week compels us to content ourselves with simple mention of the following more or less meritorious and noteworthy pictures:—"Lady Wealth," a beautiful oil miniature, by W. Gale; "Blaise," by Miss E. Osborn; "A Spanish Hallebardier," by F. W. Weebles; "The Reconciliation," a good example of a former practice, by T. B. Hardy; "Fruit," a small basket of female heads, named after Shakespearean heroines, by T. F. Dickses; "Sunday Afternoon," an old lady romancing, a little picture by Mr. Pope, showing a marked advance; two studies of female character and expression, by Miss E. Edwards; and three pictures by Miss Mutrie. Mr. Wallis has again offered a £100 prize for the best figure-picture, and a £50 prize for the best landscape contributed to this Exhibition.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE Houghton Meeting had plenty of matches, such as they were; but, when the first two days were over it was fearfully dull. It is as inconceivable that a body like the Jockey Club should eke out five to six hours on the Heath, as that they should have to "make" matches and selling stakes, "winner to be sold for 40 sovs., &c.," as that England should have put up for auction the queen's plate, and other shilling postage. In fact, it is not racing, but mere money-changing. Rapid Rhone, who made the first great Heath sensation of the year by cutting down Lord Clifden in the Chester Cup, could not stand up to Birch Brown in a match over the Abingdon mile. Brahma, giving Lee wiseacre 9lb., run a good race with Mr. Naylor's Swaddy, in a match class), and his running, combined with his second for the Criterion and Doncaster Two-Year-Old, show him to be a very steady-tempered horse. Kenyon's Sweetbriar, by Sweetmeat—Briar, but there was one of Baron Rothschild's dark and dangerous King Tom fillies ready for him in a 50-sovs. stakes, and Sweetbriar was 4 to 1 on him, he was beaten by a head. The son of Trumpeter, whose Doncaster lot will be pretty full, was not quite himself in the last. Coup-d'Etat, who was so much fancied for the Derby before his nominator died, showed some fine T.Y.C. form. He had, however, an effective stopper (9 st. 5 lb.) to deal with in Mr. Thompson's Sandpaper, weighting in one of his races, as well as that of Feon, made nearly as much classical in high places as the Wandering Minstrel colt was in forthright before. He lays him up for the season, and no one fancied Cambuscan (8 st. 9lb.) for Doncaster, handicap, in which the favourite Pille de Lait, not a ghost of chance in the hands of Archer Richard, to whom she tried to give 17lb.; while Breeze, who gave him 10 lb., came very near. Mr. Naylor's Cambuscan, however, was not with a dead heat, and the last match had a peculiar significance, seeing that it was between Spinaway and Bonnet, two three-year-olds which are now worshipped at race meetings a good deal more than genuine sport. The "three ribbons" of last year have done especially well. Lord Clifden has been followed before us by Lady Elizabeth, and falls in a third when he was running forward; Queen Bertha has been out of form; and Spinaway is a shadow of her self.

Money was never more plentiful than on Monday at the Corner, and Liddington was in great force, at only 6 or 8½ against him. Chattanooga, despite a magnificent preparation, and, in Archer and Broadlabane, whom report describes as a more powerful colt than his brother will be for Doncaster, was beaten. "Garde" Adventurer is advertised for sale at 3000 gs.; and King of the Vale is sold, like King of Diamonds, for Doncaster. It is said that the Joseph Hawley will retain Asteroid, or the Rous legacy horse, as he is termed. According to Bell's, Veletta's owner has refused a 1000-guinea offer for his horse from Mr. Merry and paddock, in St. Albans, will have a fourth season. The Ranger goes to Ireland; and Knight of Snowdon has been bought by Mr. Ten Broeck.

It is now said that £25,000 is the amount of the Marquis of Hastings's winnings upon Ackworth, and that he has presented his trainer, John Day, with a handsome testimonial. Be this as it may, the establishment of these great handicaps in 1830, it seems that no horse has ever won both of those now in the same year until 1864. Taking the same years, four horses have been first for the one race and second for the other, five first and third, five first and fourth, seconds, two double thirds, and two a second and a third; so that, despite the difference in distance, horses that have been forward in the one have generally been forward in the other. The Cesarewitch has a good deal of rivalry, and a bet is pending, as to whether J. Grimshaw or Pavilion will win the next two races for the Cup. The Pavilion match luck at Newmarket Houghton has now, we hear, increased his score to 128, giving him a lead of ten at the end of that meeting; which the feather, with only four Newmarket runs to do it in, will have hard work to pull down. Still, he reduced it to eight on the first day of the Worcester.

Fatest, after his wretched exhibition at the Amesbury Meeting, has won a small stake at Tredegar Park. The Rev. Mr. Hawkins's match of The World v. the Altcar Club at the former meeting has been so great that there is said to be very little chance of a return match. Mr. Randell's two winners are both by Mr. Thompson's sires from Mr. Gregson for £50 last year; and the seven Benson puppies which that season are all living. Mr. Thompson has sold Sandpaper to cup in his own district with Tullochgorum, own brother to King Death.

In consequence of the want of rain, many of the packs were obliged to give up steeplechasing for their harriers. Melton is likely to have a great season, and foxes seem to be remarkably plentiful everywhere. The Duke of Beaufort's are to meet at Badminton on Oct. 29, with the Cheshire, who killed an old dog fox after a fast 45 min., with only one check, and ran their second fox to ground after a hard 2h. 20 min., and in view for the last few minutes. There are new huntsmen to 15 of the 120 packs of foxhounds in England and Wales, George Jones is with the Belvoir, Nimrod Long with the Brocklesby, and John Fricker, the first whip, has succeeded George Carter, who retires after a very long and honourable connection with the pack. The subsequence of the ground, which was so hard that they "might as well have met in Piccadilly," let Lord Coventry's hounds run into a fox on the 24th ult., when they killed a stag. Tuesday was the first public day, and Mr. Davis, who was gazetted huntsman in 1852, when he was thirty-four, appeared again, in all the enjoyment of a green old age, at the head of his pack. He may be well termed "the Palmerston of the chase."

SCENES IN CORSICA.

THE TOWN OF AJACCIO, BIRTHPLACE OF NAPOLEON I.

We have engraved two sketches by M. Susini, a native artist, illustrative of the scenery of Ajaccio, in Corsica, the birthplace of Napoleon Bonaparte. This town is of less antiquity than some upon the Italian mainland, having been founded about the end of the fifteenth century. It is situated on a tongue of land projecting into the spacious bay or Gulf of Ajaccio, and sheltered on the north-east side by a range of lofty and precipitous mountains. The streets are broad and straight; the houses are generally well built, and it is a place of some trade. There is a cathedral, a college supported by the municipality, an Imperial school of navigation, a picture gallery, a public library, and a botanical garden. The harbour, which is secure and commodious, is protected by a citadel. The avenues of orange-trees around the town afford an agreeable resort. The house in which Napoleon was born, Aug. 15, 1769, is still to be seen; but does not appear in our present View. The subject of the second Engraving is Mont St. Antoine, a remarkable eminence, four or five miles from the town of Ajaccio, where are a small chapel and a shrine of St. Antony, to which, on the 17th of January, the devout population ascend.

SCENES IN BORNEO.

THE MALAY COMPONG, SARAWAK.

We have been favoured by Mr. F. Boyle with a series of Sketches illustrative of the scenery and native population of Sarawak, in Borneo, whence he returned a few months since. The name of Sarawak (to be pronounced with the accent on the second syllable) is, strictly speaking, applied to the whole province which was under the control of Muda Hassan when Sir James Brooke first arrived in the country. The Rajah's present dominions probably comprise twice that territory and three times the original population. The chief town itself is called by the natives Kucking, which signifies "The Cat." It lies about eighteen miles from the sea, and contains, at present, nearly 17,000 Malay inhabitants. The Chinese, who wander over the whole Eastern world in search of gain, have not neglected Sarawak; and they number, probably, 1000 in Kucking alone. Many of them have considerable wealth, and they carry on a very successful trade with the natives in birds' nests, gutta-percha, rattans, and other commodities. Since an English Consul has lately been appointed to the province under Sir James Brooke's government a great impulse will doubtless be given to trade, and a rapid increase of the Chinese immigrants may be expected. There are also a few Klings (from Bengal) and some Javanese, all of whom thrive well in the settlement. The subject of our first Illustration is the Malay suburb, or Compong, on the banks of the river, adjoining the town of Sarawak. Our second Engraving represents a group of the Dyaks (pronounced "Dyahs"), the aboriginal race of Borneo. Their colour is a yellowish brown, and their features are of the Malay type; but many of the young girls are very pretty. The attitudes of the figures shown in our Illustration will give an idea of the various modes of fighting they practise. The two men in the foreground are contending with the "Parang ilang"—a sword without a guard, the blade of which is concave on one side and convex on the other, forming a terrible weapon in skilful hands. Behind is a warrior with the "sumpit," or blow-pipe, through which are projected small arrows tipped with deadly poison. The force with which these missiles are thrown is almost incredible. Their war-cloaks are generally made of the skin of the wild bull, ornamented with the feathers of the rhinoceros hornbill, which bird is regarded with superstitious reverence by all the natives of Borneo.

DYAKS IN THEIR WAR DRESS.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

THE MARQUIS OF BRISTOL.

The most noble Frederick William Hervey, second Marquis and sixth Earl of Bristol, Earl Jermyn, of Horningsheath, and Baron Hervey, of Ickworth, both in the county of Suffolk, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, G.C., F.R.S., F.S.A., was the eldest son of Frederick William, first Marquis and Earl of Bristol, by his wife, the Hon. Elizabeth Albina Charlotte Upton, second daughter of Clotworthy, first Lord Templetown. His Lordship was born on the 16th of July, 1800, and was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, at which University he graduated as M.A. in 1822, and was made an honorary LL.D. in 1842. He, while Earl Jermyn, represented Bury St. Edmunds in the House of Commons from 1830 to 1831, and sat for West Suffolk just prior to his father's death. He voted against the passing of the Reform Act, and consistently opposed all subsequent Whig party, but when the Right Honourable Robert Peel became Premier, Earl Jermyn joined him, and was made Treasurer of the Household, a post which he relinquished in 1846. He ever since, both in the House of Lords and House of Lords, supported the Administrations of the Earl of Aberdeen and Lord Palmerston. He succeeded to the family honours on the decease of his father, Feb. 15, 1859. The Marquis of Bristol was an excellent landlord, and was beloved by the poor on his extensive landed property. His death will be deplored not only by his family but by very many in the county of Suffolk. His Lordship married, Dec. 14, 1824, Lady Katherine Isabella Manners, third daughter of John, Duke of Rutland, by whom (who died April 29, 1849) he leaves surviving issue four sons and two daughters. He died on the 20th ult., at his seat, Ickworth Park, near Bury St. Edmunds, and is succeeded by his eldest son, Frederick William John, Earl Jermyn, now third Marquis of Bristol, who was born in June, 1834, and who married, in 1862, Geraldine, youngest daughter of the late Commodore the Hon. George Anson, who died in India as Commander-in-Chief, while on his way to Delhi. The Marquis has a daughter by this marriage. He has not as member for the western division of Suffolk since 1859. His next brother, Lord Augustus Henry Charles Hervey, becomes heir presumptive to the honourable and other honours. The historic family of Hervey, Earls and Marquises of Bristol, descends from a younger son of Hervé, Duke of Orleans, one Robert Fitz Hervey, who came over to England with the Conqueror. The line from that time to now can boast of frequent eminence in the State Government, the Senate, the Navy, and the Army. The first who attained the peerage was John Hervey, Esq., a distinguished member of the House of Commons, who was created, in 1703, Baron Hervey of Ickworth, and (in 1714) Earl of Bristol, His great-grandson, Frederick William, fifth Earl, was created Marquis of Bristol and Earl Jermyn, June 30, 1826. He was father of the Marquis just deceased.

SIR R. H. RYCROFT, BART.

Sir Richard Henry Charles Rycroft, third Baronet, of Calton, in the county of York, was the eldest son, to survive childhood, of Sir Nelson Rycroft, the second Baronet, by his wife, Caroline, daughter of Richard Bayley, Esq., of Cotwood, in the county of Wilts. He was born, Dec. 31, 1799, and was educated at Eton and Christ's College, Cambridge. He was a magistrate for Hampshire, and was formerly Captain in the Third Dragoon Guards. He succeeded his father, Oct. 1, 1827. He married, May 18, 1830, Charlotte Anne Jane, eldest daughter of William Tennant, Esq., of Little Aston Hall, in Staffordshire, and by her (who died in the month of Farlowcroft, and leaves two sons, she died on the 21st ult., and is succeeded by her eldest surviving son, now Sir Nelson Rycroft, fourth Baronet, who was born March 7, 1831, and was an officer in the 8th Regiment. He married, July 21, 1858, Juliana, eldest daughter of Sir John Copley, Bart., of Sprotbrough, and has four sons. This family sprang from John Nelson, Esq., of Hatton-garden, and of Calton, in the county of York, whose only son was the late Rev. Richard Nelson, D.D., Rector of Thornhaugh, Essex, sustained by Royal license, Dec. 28, 1758, the very uncommon surname of Rycroft, and was created a Baronet Dec. 28, 1781. His eldest son was Sir Henry Rycroft, Knight Harbinger to Queen Charlotte; and his eldest son was Sir Nelson Rycroft, father of the Baronet just deceased.

GENERAL ROBBINS.

Thomas William Robbins, a General in the Army, and Colonel of the 80th Foot, who died on the 27th ult., at his residence, near Lyndhurst, in the eighteenth year of his age, was a distinguished officer in the British service. He entered the British Army in 1803, and was in Sicily, in 1806-7, with the First Brigade of Guards, under Sir John Moore. He was subsequently present at the 7th Hussars in the Peninsula and France; in the campaign of 1813 and 1814, including the investment and reduction of Bayonne, and in the campaign of 1815, with several intermediate affairs of outposts. He was also in Flanders, in 1815, with the 7th Hussars, and was present at Quatre Bras. He commanded a squadron of that regiment in the affair at Genappe; and was at the Battle of Waterloo, where he was severely wounded. He was also present with two chaps for Orthes and Toulouse. He received the war medal, in 1821, a General in 1857, a Major-General in 1858, a Lieutenant-General in 1854, and a General on the 5th of November, 1862.

The gallant General married, 1st, in 1813, Penrhyn, daughter of Richard Colling; and, in 1825, Fanny Sophia, elder daughter of Admiral Sir Byam Parker, which lady survives him.

MAJOR WEYLAND.

Richard Weyland, Esq., of Woodrising Hall, in the county of Norfolk, a Major in the Army, whose death has been announced, was the eldest son and heir of John Weyland, Esq., of Woodrising, by his wife, Elizabeth, daughter of John Norman, Esq., of Woodrising Hall, Norfolk. He was born on March 25, 1789, and was for a short time at St. John's College, Cambridge, but left the University to accept a commission in the 16th Light Dragoons, with which regiment throughout the Peninsular War. He succeeded, under the will of his maternal grandfather, Mr. John Norman, to the estate of Tuddenham, near Mildenhall, in Suffolk, in 1832, in which latter year he took, and was gazetted High Sheriff for Oxfordshire in 1852, in which latter year he married Mary, daughter of the Rev. Richard Nelson, D.D., Rector of Thornhaugh, Northamptonshire, and sister of Sir John Lowther Johnstone, of Westerhall, Bart., and by her (who died Dec. 1, 1862) he has issue two sons and two daughters. The eldest son, Richard Elisbeth—married, in 1844, to James Walker, present Earl of Verulam. The eldest son of the late Richard Weyland, Esq., of Woodrising, by his wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Ulick John, present Marquis of Clanricarde, was born in 1789, and succeeded his father in 1832. He married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of William Bowyer Smyth, Bart., in his nephew. Major Weyland, of Woodrising, was in Norfolk and Oxfordshire, where he was a magistrate and deputy Lieutenant of both counties, he was universally respected. The Weyland family is descended from the ancient Norfolk race of Weylands, of Weyland Hall, Rushford, ancestor of Major Weyland, just deceased, was John Weyland, Esq., of Woodrising, Norfolk, an alderman of London, merchant, and a director of the Bank in 1742.

H. L. WICKHAM, ESQ.

Henry Loyds Wickham, Esq., who died on the 27th ult., at his house, 15, Chesterfield-street, May-fair, was the eldest child of the Right Hon. William Wickham, by his wife, Eleonore Madeleine, daughter of Mr. Albert Bertrand, Professor of Mathematics at the University of Lausanne. He was born on the 10th of May, 1789, and was educated on the foundation of Westminster-school and at Christ Church College, Oxford, where he obtained a first-class in classics in 1810. He was called to the Bar on the 13th of May, 1817. He was Secretary of Lincoln's Inn, and for a time was Private Secretary to his father when he held the office of Receiver-General of Gibraltar for many years, and was for a short time Under-Secretary for the Home Department. His brother, Henry Boyd, was Chancellor of the Exchequer. In 1838 Mr. Wickham was appointed Chairman of the United Boards of stamps and Taxes, an office which he held till he resigned it, on account of ill-health, in 1848. He was afterwards one of the Public Loan Commissioners. Mr. Wickham married Lucy, youngest child of William Markham, Esq., of Becca Hall, in the county of York, and grandchamberlain of the Most Hon. William Markham, Archbishop of York, by whom he leaves two sons and a daughter.

Mr. John Leech, the favourite artist, died on Saturday evening last, aged forty-seven. Though he suffered severely, his life was not supposed to be in immediate danger. He went out to consult Dr. Quain on Friday, and there was a chill in parry all the hips at the time of his death. We intend to give a Portrait and a Memoir of Mr. Leech in our next Number.

ANTIQUARIAN DISCOVERIES IN CAITHNESS.

We are obliged to Mr. John Mackie, editor of the Northern Ensign, at Wick, for the drawings from which we have engraved the figure of some curious relics of prehistoric antiquity recently discovered by Mr. Samuel Laing (the late Finance Minister of India) in the grounds of Keiss Castle, Caithness, where Mr. Laing has resided for some months past. In a letter published a few weeks ago in that journal Mr. Laing himself gave a description of the result of the excavations he had ordered. They took place in a funeral mound, or long "barrow," near the Mains of Keiss, about 200 yards from the sea, to the village, and another smaller mound on the sandy "links" near the seashore. It appears that are human skeletons have been found inclosed in rude cists of unhewn stones, having the appearance of great antiquity. One of these was found at the base of the smaller mound, Keiss links—the others in the larger mound, where from every appearance there must be from fifty to one hundred bodies. The remarkable fact about these cells is that they show a type of singularly low development, being of small capacity, with narrow receding foreheads and projecting jaws. One skull in particular shows a monstrous type, with a gigantic development of the upper jaw teeth, characteristic of the negro and other inferior races, in a skull which seems scarcely human. Combined with this is a forehead receding at the same angle, and narrower by fully half an inch than the narrowest shown in the Caithness skulls. A fourth, and still smaller mound, given by Wilson in his "Prehistoric Scotland." The skeletons generally indicate men of short stature, from 5ft. to 5ft. 4in. in height. They were buried at full length, and so, from without regard to position, lying in some cases on the back, in others on the face, and in one case with the head beside the thighs of the corpse. The peculiar type of these crania adds to the interest of the question of their antiquity. Unfortunately, no trace can be found of any implement or ornament having been interred with them. But the shelly mounds, with which they are evidently associated, are especially evidence of their having belonged to the stone period. Excavations have disclosed part of a subterranean dwelling, or place of sacrifice, built like the Picts' houses, with narrow passages and some small chambers, walled, paved, and roofed over, at a great expense of labour, with large unhewn stones, brought from the beach at some distance. In these were numerous shells, charred bones, and burnt matter; and among these débris were found two stone implements, one a smooth, oval sandstone block, about six inches in diameter, round which a deep groove had been cut, giving it exactly the appearance of a ship's block cut in two. Into the other was a small round hole, opened with a hole, of the sort well known to antiquaries as "wheels," another "whorl" was found of bone, made of the ball of the femur of some animal, and a bone pin, with the sharp point broken made of bone. One or two chalk flints were found, which had some appearance of having been artificially chipped, and thrown aside as failures, but no trace of any flint weapon. These, however, with the total absence of any mark of tools on the stones and on the graves and buildings, their identity in type with other tumuli and barrows in which stone and flint weapons have been discovered, and the total want of any trace of pottery or earthenware, which must have mixed largely with the refuse heaps of any people acquainted with their use, will probably suffice to satisfy us that the mounds, with their accompanying remains, are really of the stone period. We subjoin an index to the several articles shown in our Engraving:—

No. 1. A bone chisel.
No. 2. A worked handle.
Nos. 3, 4, 6, and 7. Bone ornaments, like armlets.
No. 5. A triangular piece of carved bone.
No. 8. A bone handle.
No. 9. A carved bone, half bored through.
No. 10. A bone needle.

CELTIC TOOLS OR WEAPONS DISCOVERED BY MR. S. LAING AT KEISS CASTLE, CAITHNESS.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will of Admiral the Right Hon. George Earl Cadogan, C.B., of Caversham Park, Oxfordshire, and Chelsea Hospital, in her Majesty's Court of Probate, on the 19th ult., by the Hon. Frederick William Cadogan, the son and Lady Augusta Cadogan and Lady Beresford Lenie Cadogan, the daughters. The personalty was sworn under £35,000. His Lordship executed his will in 1841 and added a codicil in 1862, and died on the 17th of September last, at the age of eighty-one. After leaving some tokens of remembrance to his sons and daughters, his Lordship disposes of his property in trust for his two daughters for their lives, and after their decease to be transferred to his son Frederick absolutely. To Rev. Hill, the confidential servant of the late Countess, is left a legacy of £1000, together with his Lordship's gold watch. Several legacies are left to his late steward and valet, an annuity of £20 to his upper female servant, and one year's wages to his other servants. All property at his death free of legal claims.

The will of Sir Henry Lacy Yea, Bart., of Taunton St. Mary Magdalen, Somerset, was proved in the London Court by William Wakely Yea, Esq., the nephew, and sole executor. Sir Henry had not recently succeeded to the title on the death of his brother, the late Baronet. Sir Henry executed his will on the 25th of August last, the week previous to his death, and died at the age of sixty-six. He has bequeathed to his nephew, the Rev. Edward Henry Rodgers, M.A., late of Wadham College, Oxford, the rectory of Henry Fry (the son of his executor) to leaves £100; and there are a few other legacies to his executor's children and to servants. The residue, real and personal, he leaves to his executor "in testimony and grateful acknowledgement of the great care and attention he has uniformly paid and shown to him during the many years he had lived with him."

The will of Mr. R. P. Robson, described therein as "Thomas Frederick Brownhill, more commonly known as Frederick Thomas Robson, London," of 4, Hungerford-road, Camden-road, was proved in the London Court, on the 26th of October, by the executors, Charles Brookes, Esq., of Basset-street, Camden-road, Gentleman, and William Scull, Esq., of Clement's Inn, Strand. The personalty was sworn under £4000. The will was brought into court by Mr. Scull, Esq., the executor, and is dated "this 1st day of September, 1864." The testator "testator Frederick Brownhill," appears to be tremulously written. He bequeaths to his executors all his property, real and personal, in trust, and, if required, he leaves to his executor "in testimony and grateful acknowledgement of the great care and attention he has uniformly paid and shown to him during the many years he had lived with him."

The will of Mr. J

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

YEARS ago, people who loved fun used to be delighted with pictures bearing a little bottle in the corner, which bottle for a long time formed the sign or symbolic monogram of John Leech, our latest and best characteristic artist. There is, perhaps, hardly a writer, a reader, or a thinker who will not feel sorry to hear that the kindly humourist and observant artist is dead. He died, on Saturday night last, of angina pectoris, and adds another to the list of men of genius whom we have lost within these few years. His style was well known to the readers of this journal, whose pages he has adorned. Where was it not well known? Our very "swells," and all our upper-class ladies rather imitated his fashions, used to dress after his pictures; our young bankers than he theirs; nay, even our American cousins, who have as yet produced no great caricaturist themselves, copied his "social subjects," and transplanted the fashionable follies of Regent-street to the Broadway, and from London to New York and Boston.

The best biography of John Leech is written in the woodcuts of the pages of Punch. His first contribution appeared in the first volume of "Punch, or the London Charivari;" and if it be compared to the grace and delicacy of his pencil of yesterday the difference is immense. Certain Galleries of Comicalities, Comic Latin Grammars, and other works, owned much to him; but it is in the pages of Punch that is written all that is worthy of him. He was more than a caricaturist. Gilray and Heath may be called caricaturists if the cynism of that word be caricare, to overload; but Leech never overloaded his work; and was never vulgar, always observant, and (to use that word in a common remark that one could always follow John Leech from one scrimmage place to another—from Alderney to Aldgate, from Belgravia to Scarborough, and looking at the landscape of life-sketches he sent up. He was not a satirist, but a painter of manners—persons of a class more to be gent and the snob too heavy a blow; but what he did was done in evident kindness; and what he desired was, perhaps, somewhat out of the world. His horses and dogs called forth as much fun and expressions of delighted surprise from Sir Edwin Landseer. In those days, when crime was confined to the higher or lower class, were full of grace where grace was wanted, and humour where it was not. To the country newspaper imp who is rushing along whistling "Love-ly La-cy game of "owering" near Aintree, Liverpool, when, especially, the fun is spiked all the posties." So intimately was he known to the whole country—of all classes, that it is probable that the death of a great General or a Prime Minister would have made less impression than some round with his genial fun to make us at the same time merry and wise.

We have had sent us from over the water a pamphlet of some importance. It is called "The Northern Question Resolved, and published advocates, not a Confederacy, but a kingdom, in North America, with a King to be chosen from our present Royal family. The author is exceedingly severe, and we think with reason, upon the fainest policy of England, which bids her prepare to dismember that which you foreseen men. "Federation," cries the author, with a glance over the border; we have seen something of federation. Republicanism, yes that means despotism, does it not? The Northern States are fast approaching dissolution. It is in a stable, limited monarchy that lies the sole hope of North-Western America." There is that in his words which deserves very careful weighing.

We are to have, we hear, some splendid new buildings for the Post Office business opposite Sir R. Smirke's fine work at the back of the Great Exhibition. It stands in three parishes, and 131 houses and 1000 inhabitants were displaced to make room for it. Many of the shops to be transacted on, and, as we know, much of the business is obliged to be transacted elsewhere, it has been thought necessary to concentrate connected with the imperial department under the control of the Postmaster-General, being now at some small distance, will be moved in the new and fine buildings which we are promised. We presume that in another forty years more letters will be exhausted and control, and that a new office will be then thought necessary to replace that built by George Cubitt, Esq.

Authorship, as every writer knows pretty well, has not only, like property, according to Lord Mulgrave, "its duties as well as its rights," but it has peculiar pains and troubles which non-writers do not know. Mr. Lucas, the Rev. Martin, when in the throes of production, walk about his house with a wet towel round his forehead as a sign that nobody, not even the wife of his bosom was to be disturbed. Another illustrious author take physic and phlebotomise when about to produce an epic? And Victor Hugo, the first French tree?—That his "Life of Caesar" is not published is that he is afraid of the judgment of posterity, and that contemporary posterity will be the foreign reader; that he had written his article by work in disgust; and by one more than such jadism proves that he will have to answer with his life if he lets any of it out; that the former has exhausted language and the latter swears never to forget every sentence they have composed. Truly, it is brave to be an Imperial author? Every Imperial author in England we can only say that by their perpetual industry they have fuel relieving their craft of the stigma so generously accorded to it of being a "lazy profession."

As a piece of good news—for the further spread of great and noble thoughts is surely good news—we may add that a new edition from Tennyson's speeches for the working, let us for three-pence per month, that these three halfpennies per week, the working man can become possessed of really the noblest poems in the age.

Amongst the successful authors, let us not forget our excellent friend Mr. Browning. We cannot neglect to record that he has given the profits of the sale of 50,000 copies of his pamphlet, upwards of $1700 sterling, to various charities, and this in addition to 2000 pamphlets distributed gratis! Their sells us to the Times. Pleasant as the charitable portion of this is, it gives us an awful impression of Multiplying the number by four, we shall have two hundred thousand fat men in England sufferers from "corpulency," and as many fifty million per year—fifty millions to be put by in some way, or been were to feed less and give their surplus to the poor—what should we save then?

A communication to the Times informs us that a prayer-book, with two autographs of Shakspeare, has been discovered in Wales. Mr. Toulmin Smith has seen the book and makes a very guarded statement about it. Mr. Smith is a Warwickshire man, and well known as a "Shakspearian;" but, if we are not misinformed, did not see the book. Is not one of Ireland's forgeries as a genuine relic of the Immortal Bard?

FRY'S HOMŒOPATHIC COCOA, distinguished by fine flavour, solubility, and nutritive properties.

BREAKFAST BEVERAGE.—Homœopathic principles, and the medical profession generally, recommend a daily use of Cocoa in preference to all beverages. While the doctrine of homœopathy was first introduced into this country by the late Dr. Epps, he specially directed attention to the advantages of Cocoa in taste or appropriateness to the stomach, and was the first applied in the crude state or as unskilfully manufactured as to obtain only a portion of its FULL NUTRITIVE homœopathic Organic, was induced, in the year 1829, to turn his attention to this subject, and after many years of careful experiment and scientific research, was the first to produce a Cocoa which, by the aid of mechanism, and so refined by the perfect trituration which it receives in the process it passes through, is rendered eminently suitable to the delicate stomach.

EPPS'S HOMŒOPATHIC COCOA is distinguished as an invigorating and grateful Breakfast and Supper Beverage.—Vide Dr. Hassall, in his work, "Adulterations of Food," says:—"Cocoa contains a great variety of nutritive principles, namely, the ingredients of bone, muscle, the growth and sustenance of the body. Again, "As a nutritive, Cocoa is one of the most valuable of the articles of food we possess."—See Analytical Sanitary Review. Sold in a breakfast-cup filled up with boiling water or milk. SLAVE-SOLDIERS.

THERE is no more revolutionary agency in human affairs than war. It would be a mere truism to speak of the rapid and violent changes which occur in the physical and material condition of the countries in which war is waged. Despite of modern theories of gentle and tender warfare, conducted on what are called the principles and requirements of advanced civilisation, devastation, rapine, and all their attendant miseries still characterise the movements of belligerent armies. The moral and social effect of this huge evil on nations and individuals may not be so patent, but it is almost as certain. The influence for the worse which a single campaign exercises on the minds, habits, and feelings of persons actually bearing arms cannot be overrated in relation to a disregard of human life and sufferings and a confusion of ideas on the subject of property. But a deeper and wider influence is brought to bear on the social and even the political opinions of communities by the operation of war. No more notable instance of such an operation on the public mind could be adduced than the change which has taken place, socially and personally, so to speak, in the feeling of the American people towards the negro race. It would be useless on the part of the most pronounced adherent of the Federals to deny that in the social scale the negro in the North has hitherto been forced into the condition of a pariah. A system of special exclusiveness was adopted towards the coloured race, which obtained in every public place, not excepting places of worship. Contact with them was an abomination, and even in the remotest degree the taint was sufficient to create and to nourish aversion. But somehow, in the North, in the third or fourth year of the civil war, all this has suffered a change. On the whole, the negro—certainly the negro who escapes from the South—has been promoted to the position of a pet. In a certain sense, the free black is really more of a free man. His name has become another word for a cause. Nay, there are some philosophical naturalists who hold that the only hope of checking an alleged deterioration in the physique of the American race is to be found in an engrafting of the negro upon the white, and miscegenation is a familiar word in the Transatlantic vocabulary. Indeed, so conscious is the gentleman of colour of his rise in the social and physiological market, that a preacher of that particular human family, reversing the once regular notice which was prominent at the entrances of churches and chapels, has ventured to announce that a special place will be set aside in his edifice for such white people as might be desirous to attend his ministrations.

But the most significant fact in reference to the status of the negro in the Northern States is that of his enlistment and enrolment in regiments in the Federal armies. No doubt, in the first instance, this was intended as a stroke of subtle policy, a kind of protest against that slavery which was made the ostensible, if not the chief, motive of the war. Something of the needs of recruiting, and not a little in regard to providing for the safe disposal of runaway slaves from the South, may have been at the bottom of this proceeding; but the privilege that was proclaimed was that of giving the self-emancipated slave the opportunity of fighting against the system of thraldom from which he had escaped. Contrary to expectation, the negro regiments, who were secretly believed to be only food for powder, turned out to be soldiers, equal, if not more than equal, to the average; and now it is the regular custom to specify with laudation their conduct in all the actions which take place. In the case of negroes serving under white officers and brigaded with white regiments, the attrition of war has rubbed down many angles of opposition, and, in many instances, there has been something akin to fraternisation between the troops of divergent colours. So far as we at this distance can ascertain, the experiment which has been made in the Federal armies has been successful, and the negro has made a further step in his progress towards the assertion of his position amongst men.—In America.

A proposal which has been mooted for the conscription of the negro in the South bears upon the face of it a still greater importance than is involved in the admission of that race to the armies of the North. It is needless to say that slavery apart—in the South has always been very different to that to which he was subjected in the North. Although in the South his social status was technically more distinctly defined, it is at least a question whether what may be called his domestic code of contact and intercourse with the predominant race were so marked by the antipathy in which his kindred in the North was held. To be sure, he was a slave, and that comprehended everything which could be held to be degradation; but personally, and with a certain individuality, he was not treated as if he were positively loathsome. He often lived in a sort of household familiarity with whites to which the free negro of the North never attained. And yet there were many reasons why the transformation of a Southern slave into a Confederate soldier would have been a more violent change than that which has taken place in the case of the free black of the North. In the first place, the Southern negro represented so much property, which was put in jeopardy by his enlistment; in the next place, doubts might well exist of the prudence of arming and disciplining a man to fight against a cause which, though not even ostentatiously, was put forward as his own by the North; while the services of that which was essentially the labouring population in a country mostly agricultural was too necessary to its requirements, either peaceful or belligerent, hastily to be placed at risk. All these and many considerations may have actuated the Confederates in abstaining from receiving their armies from the negro population appear to be yielding to the inevitable necessities of the war; and we hear that "the time has come to put into the army every able-bodied negro as a soldier." It is not to be supposed that he now plays an important part in the war, that he caused the fight, and he must have his portion of the burden." The most striking admission, in a manifesto of the Governor of Louisiana from which the above sentence are extracted, is found in a statement that "not all able to bear arms should be freed and put into the field at once." If this principle is to be carried out in its integrity, the work of emancipation will have begun at the moment that the first negro corps is enrolled. It is allowed, as a necessary condition to his becoming a soldier,

The Master of the Rolls at Dublin delivered judgment on Thursday week in a case relating to Irish charitable religious communities. It appears from this judgment that money cannot be legally left to the monks of a Roman Catholic monastery in Ireland, because such monks are not held, by the purposes of their institution, but that the Crown can define the purposes of any bequest to them or to any other charitable trustees.

A Scotch paper records the opening of a new Baptist chapel, under singular circumstances. It is on the Island of Lismore, standing almost in the middle of Loch Linnhe, and is named after Livingstone, one of the agents of the Baptist Missionary Society for Scotland. He has not only gone to the island, at his own expense, but has built a new house, yearly every sense, besides assisting as a laborer to the workmen.

Subsequently it was found that the cost had exceeded £16,000, and Mr. Findlater increased his donation, so that he has borne the whole expense, save the cost of the site and a mortgage which is held by the church to secure the expenses.

An address and a massive piece of plate were, on Wednesday week, presented to the Mayoress and Marchioness of Hastings, on the occasion of their marriage, in July last, by the tenantry of their estates in the Isle of Axholme and Castle Donington and the tradesmen of the family. The first stone of the harbour which is to be constructed at Penzance, near Knightstone, in the Western Channel, was laid on Saturday last, by Sir Stanley Wilmot, on Saturday last, in the presence of a large concourse of the friends and supporters of the undertaking. The ceremony of unveiling the statue of the late Prince Consort, in Peel Park, Salford, was performed on Monday, in the presence of a large concourse of spectators. The statue is by Mr. Matthew Noble, and may be classed among his best works in point of portraiture as a great success. The Prince is represented in the dress of Chancellor of the Cambridge University. The memorial was unveiled by Sir Noble; and the Bishop of Manchester handed it over to the Mayor, who accepted the gift on behalf of the Corporation. We shall give an Engraving of the statue in our next Number.

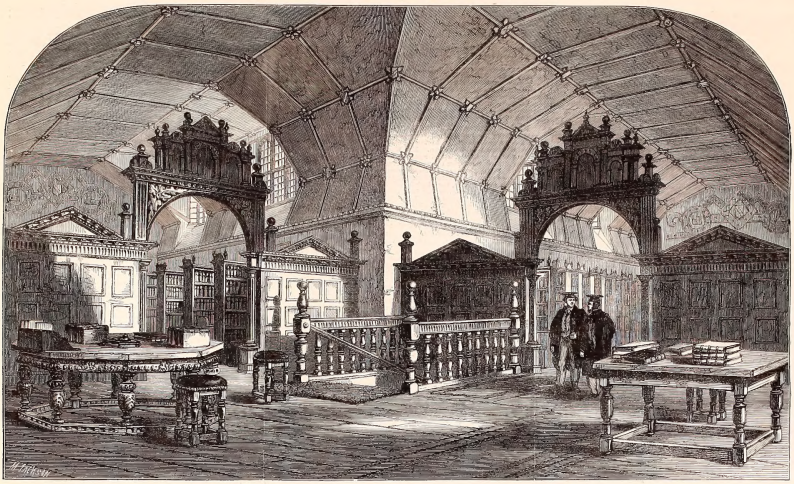
The new buildings of the Middle-class School at Blackheath were last week opened with considerable ceremony, by the Bishop of Oxford, in the presence of his Grace the Duke of Marlborough, Lord Lieutenant of Kent, Lord Clarendon, the Vice-Chancellor, the Lord Mayor, Lord Lyveden, and Colonel North, M.P. for Oxfordshire, the Archdeacon of Oxford, and a large number of the clergy, gentry, and yeomanry of the county of Oxford. At the luncheon, which was held in the new school-room, the Duke of Marlborough presided. The Bishop of Oxford hoped those present to understand clearly that the education offered had in it nothing of an exclusive character. Dr. Lowe, Head Master of Harrow-grammar, mentioned by way of encouragement that during the first twelve months of the existence of the school seventy-six he presides he had lost three pupils, while at the end of ten years he had 830.



A public meeting was held on Thursday week, in the Merchants' Hall, Glasgow, on behalf of the Scottish Episcopal Church, the Earl of Rosse presiding. The chief dignitaries of the Scottish Episcopal Church, as well as its leading laymen, were present on the occasion. Numerous speeches were delivered, amongst them one by the Bishop of London, who, in the course of his remarks, said that the movement for the commemoration of the clergy of the Church is at present shamefully inadequate, and that something must be made to raise it to a higher level. He wished the society to receive for the bishops a fixed annual income of £500, independent of any endowment which the congregations might choose to bestow upon them, and to excise £150 a year clerical income and a free house to every incumbent, as well as £100 a year for a curate in certain instances, and that each might have £100 per annum of permanent income arising from fixed capital.

At Scarborough, on Saturday last, Mr. Edward Baxter, proprietor of the North of England Advertiser, applied to the sitting magistrates for a summons against Mr. Benjamin Wrigglesworth, who have just committed series of sinews in that town. Mr. Ward stated that the Devonports, by preferring to show political manifestations, had obtained money to the amount of above £100 from the people of Newcastle, and that he himself had been circularised to the same effect. He therefore thought the magistrates had indeed large assistance to attend their sinews, where certain alleged spiritual manifestations had taken place, but which he believed to be nothing but fraud, and that the money, therefore, had been obtained under false pretences. He thought that the defendant should be bound over to keep the peace towards Mr. Baxter. The chairman said that he himself did not believe in those silly exhibitions, and he could not think the magistrates had power to bind over a person in the case. If people would be so foolish as to pay their money to witness such exhibitions they must not be surprised if they had their pockets picked. The Bench refused the application.

The opening of the Royal Hospital at Lancaster, on Thursday week, which was anticipated by our description and view of that building, was a great popular festival in the town and neighbourhood. The Bishops of Manchester and Chester, the Mayor of Lancaster, and the Duke of Devonshire were present on the new edifice, which is about a mile from the town, and which is built in the Elizabethan style, with lofty towers and gables, and elevated situation, the trade guilds, the Mayor and Corporation, the rifle corps, and the Lancaster Volunteer Artillery, with their bands and colours. The town was closed, the streets were decorated with banners and music enlivened the scene. In the course of the proceedings the Bishop of Manchester announced that a gentleman who had long resided in Bury had given to the trustees whom the late respected Bishop of Manchester, Mr. Jackson, on behalf of his townsmen, returned thanks to the committee of management for the compliment paid to the memory of the late Mr. Ripley, who, supported by Mr. M. Noble, was then handed to his widow by Mr. Ripley, in the name of the large number of subscribers. Mrs. Ripley likewise bespoke the hast of that lady herself. It should be observed that Mr. Ripley, who was the founder of the Ripley Hospital for Lunatics, died, notwithstanding one legal difficulties and the opposition of a Chancery suit, to carry out the wishes of his benefactor, and left the sum of thousands to £100,000 clear, after defraying the cost of the building. Three hundred patients will be accommodated in the new asylum, which will be maintained and taught in Ripley's Hospital. At the meeting of the Central Executive Relief Committee at Manchester, on Monday, Mr. Maclure presented a rather gloomy report. In January last, he said, the total number of persons relieved was 124,000; and August the number had fallen to a little over 100,000; in September it was to 120,000; in October it was 171,000; and in November 177,000, for the present year. The number on full time last month (155,170) was less by 97,230 than in the corresponding month of last year, and by 22,830 than the return for January. It is pointed out that the pressure of the times is being felt in other districts, and that the number of persons out of employment in no fewer than sixty-eight spinners and manufacturers (almost entirely the cotton trade) in the neighbourhood of Manchester, from which returns are not included who, by private arrangements, have been enabled to prevent their workpeople applying for relief. The total sum of money subscribed was at least 14,000 operatives will be so have been for the time entirely thrown out of employment. VIEWS OF MERTON COLLEGE, OXFORD.

THE LIBRARY.

AMONG the centenary celebrations held in the present year, that of Merton College, founded six hundred years since, is not the least interesting. The date of the establishment of this college marks the commencement of an era of English civilisation. Six centuries in unbroken sequence are a long existence for a corporate institution; and when, besides this, we observe that years have matured rather than impaired the excellence of the educational system of which Merton was the commencement, it is scarcely possible, humanly speaking, to overrate the influence of the event which the Mertonians met to celebrate festively in June last—in honour of the memory of their illustrious founder, Walter de Merton. Oxford has been well described as a mass of towers, pinnacles, and spires, rising in the bosom of a valley from groves which hide all buildings but such as are consecrated to some wise and holy purpose; "but," as we lately remarked, "not one of them exceeds in thoughtful interest the model college of Merton, with its six centuries of religious and secular history and civilisation, and its picturesque illustrations of the best periods of English architecture." The reader who is acquainted with the college annals will be reminded by its pinnacled tower and its famous library that this was the earliest home of science of a decidedly English school; and that for two centuries there was no other foundation, either in Oxford or Paris, which could at all come near it in the cultivation of the sciences. "Of the institutions to which we ascribe an immemorial antiquity," says a contemporary, "there is scarcely one in a hundred that is not modern by comparison with this, the first of English colleges. In the year 1264, when Merton was founded, the House of Commons did not exist; the first writs of summons to cities and boroughs were not issued till the next December, and the first regular Parliament was not assembled till 1265. The Court of Common Pleas was already established at Westminster; but the two other superior courts had not yet acquired a fixed abode or a separate jurisdiction. Not one of those companies which we are wont to reckon among the most ancient features of our most ancient city had then received its charter. The age of chivalry still tyrannised over commercial enterprise and intellectual aspirations. France was still ruled by St. Louis, who had not undertaken the last of the Crusades. England was overrun with foreign adventurers, lay and clerical, and racked with civil war; for the Battle of Lewes was fought in this very year, and the Battle of Evesham in the year following."

Oxford was already a place of great resort for students; but its studies were overridden by scholastic logic and theological disputation. About this time there arose one who was to introduce altogether a new order of things. Such was Walter de Merton, named from the place of his nativity, a village in Surrey, whose abbey, founded in Norman times, is celebrated in our history, and whose head sat in Parliament as a mitred abbot. At the Priory School was educated Walter de Merton; he is said to have studied at Oxford, at Mauger Hall, now the Cross Inn, in the Corn Market. He was in holy orders as early as 1237. Uniting the legal with the clerical profession, according to the practice of that age, he became eminent in the courts of Westminster Hall, particularly in the Chancery department. In 1260 he was called to the high office of Chancellor of England, and in 1274 he became Bishop of Rochester. His employment in secular affairs of the highest importance did not divert his mind from the pious and benevolent designs he had in view, but tended rather to the advancement and completion of them. He founded at Malden, in Surrey, a house of support and maintenance, not of study, for twenty scholars dwelling in the schools of Oxford, or "wheresoever else learning shall happen to flourish," the charter being dated 1264. In the same year he commenced his settlement of scholars at Oxford, which has led to the mis-statement that the College was first founded at Malden, and afterwards removed to Oxford; whereas all the charters show that Oxford was originally intended to be the place of study for the Merton scholars, which settlement, it is thought, the turbulence of the times prevented the founder from making earlier. By him the number of scholars was never decidedly and positively fixed, but this was to depend on the circumstances of the College and the state of its funds. The grandeur of the designs of Walter de Merton may be inferred from his obtaining the Royal license for bringing the waters of the Cherwell by an artificial cut through the premises. He left the College nearly one thousand pounds—a very considerable sum in those days.

In 1265, shortly after the first charter of endowment, the founder obtained for his "house of scholars" from the Abbey of Reading a piece of ground about the Church of St. John the Baptist, together with its advowson; this Church of St. John and that of St. Peter in the East being appropriated for the use of the scholars. The purchase of three distinct tenements also enabled the founder to reduce the buildings to a quadrangular form, with a frontage towards St. John-street: the warden's lodgings occupying, as at present, the east side; the church, or chapel, and wall of the cemetery, the west; and the hall, with its adjoining kitchen and buttery, the south. It is believed, also, from the simplicity of some of the earlier portions of the architecture yet distinguishable, that a part of the small court on the south of the chapel, called Mob Quadrangle, with the plain groined ceilings of the passages which lead into it, and the treasury, with its curious high-pitched roof of stone, must have been constructed in the founder's time or very soon afterwards.

At the head of benefactors to the college is Ella Longépée, Countess of Warwick, granddaughter to King Henry II., who gave several lands in the founder's time. John Wyliott, D.D., Chancellor of Exeter, gave exhibitions, in 1386, for the maintenance of twelve portionistæ, or postmasters, who resided in the house exactly opposite to the college gate; which house was the birthplace of Anthony à Wood, the historian and biographer of Oxford. The postmasters anciently performed the duties of choristers, their payment being 6s. 4d. per annum; whilst the allowances to the twenty scholars, in 1274, was fifty shillings yearly, which provided for all necessities, lodging excepted!

The main features of the new buildings will be characterised by the monastic discipline with secular studies, though recognising education rather than ritual duties or a religious life as the proper function of the society; and making liberal provision for its future adaptation to the growing requirements of the age. Not only could new statutes be made, but even the purpose changed in case of necessity. The inmates of Merton were to live by a common rule, under a common head, but they were to take no vow, and were to join none of the monastic orders. They were to study theology, but not until they had gone through a complete course of instruction in arts, and they were to look forward to unemployment in the world as well. The sagacity and wisdom of the founder led him to provide for the requirements of the times; and its inmates were to be placed with remarkable foresight in detail. The monks soon began to lose their ascendency in the University, secular learning began to gain upon theological study; monasticism had fallen on the side of decay. The statutes of Walter de Merton were followed by other founders, who thus gradually transformed Oxford from a clerical seminary, which it was fast becoming, into a sort of national education. Hence Merton became the primary model of all the collegiate bodies in Oxford and Cambridge; of the latter, Peter House, or St. Peter's, being founded in exact imitation of that of Walter de Merton. Thus it was laid the foundation of its present system. "The absolute," says Dr. Ingram, in his "Memorials of Oxford," "were no longer dispersed through the streets and lanes of the city, dwelling in hostels, houses, halls, inns, or hostels, subject to dubious control and precarious discipline, but placed under the immediate superintendence of tutors and governors, and lodged in residences called colleges. This was no less than an academical revolution, and a new order of things may be dated from this memorable era."

For many generations Merton held the foremost place among colleges, and amidst its members we find some of the most illustrious names of the fourteenth and fourteenth centuries. It is generally established that Duns Scotus and Wycliffe once resided at Merton; but Roger Bacon and Occam have always been allowed as members of the same foundation and Islip, Archbishops of Canterbury: Bishops Hooper and Jewel: Devereux, Earl of Essex: Sir Thomas Bodley, and Sir Richard Steele; and among the wardens were Sir Henry Saville, and Dr. Harvey, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood. Anthony Wood records that a Jewish synagogue stood on the side of Merton within a hundred years of the founder's death; and his munificence and foresight long enabled Merton to claim precedence with Christ Church itself. The greater portion of the Merton property and the best of the college livings were acquired and granted by Walter de Merton himself, and an almost perfect record of documents relating to the management of these estates is still preserved in the muniment-room, believed to be almost complete of its kind.

Throughout its long existence the architectural plan of the college has been maintained. It consists now, as originally, of three courts communicating with each other by vaulted passages of stone. The first or outer court comprehends the hall on the south side, the church and cancelled on the west, the ancient gateway and lodge on the south, and the warden's lodging on the east. This court was nearly rebuilt about 1589; but the main gateway is of 1418, and has two figure statues of Henry III. and Walter de Merton. The hall was originally altered, some seventy years since, by Wyatt, when it lost its oak wainscoting of drapery and most of 1540. There is still some good door communicating with the warden's lodgings, by means of which Henrietta Maria, Queen of Charles I., and, before her, Anne of Denmark, used to pass to the chapel through a small room, formerly the treasurehouse; whence there is a stone staircase leading to the sacristy, and thence a doorway into the chapel. The present gallery is modernised, but the original portals, with their acutely-pointed arches, remain on the landing-place; one has an oak door, studded with iron nails. The first or outer court resembles are found opposing the most wholesome police measures, has a truth about it. You must begin by setting the man to think for himself, instead of doing the thinking for him and imposing its results upon him in penal fashion. We unhesitatingly say that drilling and scolding have had their day—they have proved abuses, and must be pitilessly abandoned. Men must have their pleasures, and those pleasures must be various. To be perfectly practical we add that, although, of course, we rejoice to see the industrious mechanic occupying his leisure in using his skill for the production of such works as we have seen at the late exhibitions, we have no quarrel with him for preferring social talk with his fellows, and in his humble way imitating the amusements of his superiors. It is not for the well-dressed gentleman, who finds an agreeable recreation in the smoking-room of his club, where he hears and discusses all the topics of the day in the society of twenty acquaintances, to preach to the artisan that he should shut himself up in a sordid room, for new labour after the toil of the day, instead of taking his pipe in the parlour of his tavern and hearing what his brother mechanics think of German invasions or German motives. We should hold it a sin and a duty to resist any hindrance to such enjoyment on the part of the mechanic as we should to consent resistance to authority should it be mad enough to attempt to imitate the paternal rule which in France forbids more than twenty men to meet for any purpose whatever without the leave of the police. This declaration is by no means out of place, as certain efforts are in progress for putting restraints upon liberty, restraints which would in no degree affect the clubs in Pall-mall, but which would shut up great numbers of poor-man's clubs in very ungenteel places.

But while we earnestly disclaim any wish or thought of endeavouring to improve the condition of the mechanic, so far as he is personally concerned, by any kind of force save that of persuasion, and while we recognise the benefit indisputably exhibitions the true spirit of amelioration, we believe that we see a way in which the influential classes can co-operate in aid of the artisan, and can bring force, and, if necessary, brute force, to his assistance. We cannot, and if we could we would not, shut him up in his house; but we can make his home more comfortable for him, and for his careworn wife and pale children, by compelling the owners of his home to respect the laws. We can insist on compliance with sanitary regulations. Few who have not specially inquired into the matter know how much the law in this respect is neglected and violated, and how little power the mechanic has to help himself. Thousands of houses in the province of brick called London, and in the other provinces of the kingdom, are a disgrace to the civilisation of our squares and country mansions. There is very little difficulty in London of the most odious order, who have scraped together, usually by usury, or even worse means, money enough to buy rows of tenements, in connection with which they know no other duty than that of extorting the highest rent they can squeeze out of the poor. These places are vilely built and are without the commonest which ordinary sense prescribes as needful in the habitations of families. It is idle, and indeed cruel, to say that no man is obliged to live in such places. The shark landlords would grin at such a speech: they know better. One man may go—and go very fast indeed he will, stripping off every shred of property he had in the world, if he be not ready for Mr. Panks when he comes for the rent—but another man will instantly take his place, and inherit all the squalor and abomination. For a tenant under Mr. Panks to complain or to ask a landlord to improve a room would only be to be ejected at the first moment allowed by law. Now here the humbler mechanic cannot help himself, but his superiors may help him much. We desire to see the inspection of such houses as we have—not described, for we have been obliged to be reticent, and have failed to indicate many such houses as we have indicated, made a very different thing from what it is. We would have the rule about property having its duties as well as its rights proclaimed for the small landlord as well as for the rich one. We would not have our legislators frightened by the cant cry of property interfering with vested interests. There can be no interests in crimes, and it is a crime to force a human being to live under conditions that degrade him. Remember, we are accomplices if we do not help in this matter. The humbler classes have done their duty well in regard to these exhibitions, and we are anxious that we appreciate their honourable exertions, and are ready to recognise them, not with mere compliment, but by a strong exertion to make their homes happier.

Viscount De Vesci has contributed £2000 towards rebuilding the parish church of Abbeyleix, Queen's County, Ireland; and Lady De Vesci has expressed her intention to furnish the interior.

In our account last week of the restoration of the church of St. Nicholas, Great Yarmouth, the name of the architect was omitted. Mr. James Seddon's original estimate of the cost, was accidentally misprinted £2000. The actual outlay incurred in this work has been about £6000.

We have been requested to state, in reference to our account of the Coalbrookdale Railway bridge, of which we gave an illustration last week, that Mr. H. O. Bridgeman, the engineer-in-chief of the Great Western Severn Valley Railway from the commencement of the works until the opening of the line, in 1862, and not Mr. Brunlees, as stated, was the engineer at Ironbridge, is now the engineer of the Coalbrookdale Railway.

JOHN LEECH.—DIED, OCT. 29TH, AT KENSINGTON, AGED 47.—The simplest words are best where all words are vain. Ten days ago a great light, in the noon of life, and with high generous mental faculties in full power, but with the shade of physical infirmity darkening upon him, took his passionless place among friends who have this day held his pall. None of them had been fellow-workers with him for a quarter of a century, other for fewer years; but to know him well was to love him dearly, and all in whose name these lines are written mourn as for a brother. His monument is in the volumes of which this is one and last, and in a hundred works which, at this hour, few will not remember more easily than those who have just left his grave. While society, whose every phase he has illustrated with a truth, a grace, and a tenderness heretofore unknown to satiric art, gladly and proudly takes charge of his fame, they, whose pride in the genius of a great associate was equalled by their affection for an attached friend, would crave as record this their latest homage to a brother, more than to a public man, a nature then that of him who has been long early called to his rest.—November the Fourth.—Punch.

"MASTER SLENDER AND ANNE PAGE," BY SIR AUGUSTUS W. CALLCOTT, R.A., IN THE SHEEPSHANKS COLLECTION, SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

"THE NOTE AND THE NOSEGAY."

A CHARGE is sometimes preferred against artists for not painting "pictures." They paint studies and things which can only be regarded as superior articles of upholstery, but not pictures. No doubt there is, occasionally, truth in this charge. But we must remember that to paint a work that shall rank as a picture, in the higher sense of the word, demands an outlay of thought, time, and capital which an artist is not always in a position to afford. Then there are artists who, though working very acceptably within certain limits, are incapable of long sustained exertion, and invariably fail in their more elaborate attempts. Above all, however, it should be borne in mind that, before an artist can possibly succeed in painting a fine picture he must not only produce numerous tentative studies for the subject in hand, but also have painted a large number of subjects of minor and progressive degrees of difficulty. Moreover, why should not an artist, for his own gratification and profit, when he meets with a desirable model, do as Mr. Yeames has done with the little subject we have engraved—paint it with a given expression, and introduce such appropriate accessories as shall suggest a story, or, at all events, a situation interesting and romantic? We admit that when these studies are artificial and the sentiment in them is forced, frivolous, and not perfectly pure, they may be highly objectionable. But this artist's study is entirely free from any possible objection of this sort; indeed, it is noticeably different in its treatment from the majority of similar subjects. The character of model, the expression, and the painting are alike simple, natural, and unaffected. And, as regards our preceding remarks, they cannot be misunderstood, seeing that Mr. Yeames has a somewhat elaborate historical "picture" in the same exhibition where the work here engraved is now to be seen, and he has had still more important pictures of the same high class in the Royal Academy exhibitions, all of which we have favourably reviewed.

"THE NOTE AND THE NOSEGAY," BY W. F. YEAMES, IN THE WINTER EXHIBITION, PALL-MALL.

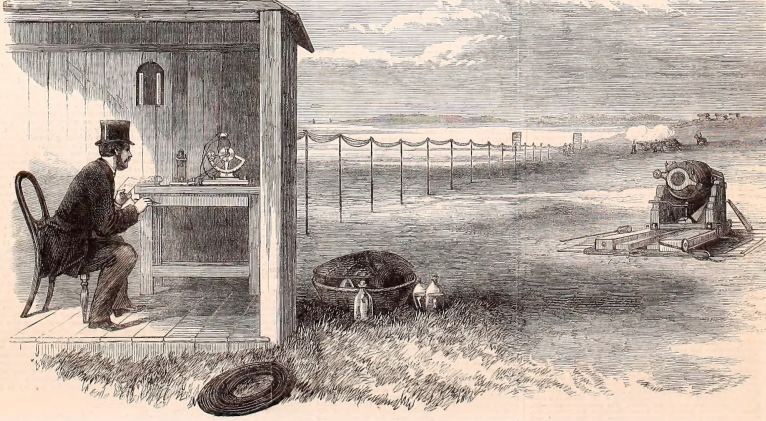
"MASTER SLENDER AND ANNE PAGE."

As a landscape-painter Sir Augustus Callcott is well known; and, notwithstanding that the current of popular taste has set somewhat against him, his talent is still highly appreciated. As a figure-painter, however, Sir Augustus is less widely known, although his masterpiece, "Raphael and the Fornarina," has, through the medium of the fine engraving by Lumb Stocks, issued by the Art-Union of London, been very generally admired; yet, when we consider how few comparatively are the figure-subjects painted by Callcott, and those late in his career, we ought, perhaps, to estimate his powers more highly for the artistic excellence displayed in these than for the familiar merits of his landscapes.

The picture we have engraved (in continuation of our series of Engravings from pictures in the national collections) is a fair example of the painter in this his more exceptional walk; and it proves him to have possessed a sense of humour as well as a perception of grace and beauty. The subject is an illustration of one of the most amusing scenes in "The Merry Wives of Windsor." Poor Master Slender! Who does not remember when he comes blubbering on the stage at the end of the play, after the scene at Herne's oak—"Whoo—ho! ho! Father Page! I came yonder to marry Mistress Anne Page, and she's a great lubberly boy; if it had not been in the church, I would have swinged him or he should have swinged me. If I did not think it had been Anne Page would I might never stir, and 'tis a postmaster's boy! If I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him." That "Slender," says Mrs. Page, with perfect justice, "though well landed, is but an idiot." His man Simple (here accompanying him) says of him, "Forsooth, he hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard;" and he agrees with Dame Quickly, that "he holds up his head, as it were, and struts in his gait." Anne Page herself says plainly, "Good mother, do not marry me to yond' fool."

The scene immediately illustrated is the first in the play, where Slender's "cousin," Justice Shallow, with Parson Evans and Mr. Page, arrange a marriage between Slender and Page's daughter; and the Justice and Parson having entered Page's hospitable house, Slender lags bashfully behind. Anne Page herself comes out to persuade him to join his friends, when the dialogue occurs which supplied the subject the painter has so well treated, and the subjoined part of which was quoted by him:—

Anne. Will 't please your Worship to come in, Sir?



Slender. No, I thank you, forsooth, heartily. I am very well.

Anne. The dinner attends you, Sir.

Slender. I am not a hungry, I thank you, forsooth. Go, sirrah, for all you are my man, go, wait upon my cousin Shallow.

APPARATUS FOR MEASURING THE VELOCITY OF PROJECTILES.

THE Electro-Ballistic Apparatus, now in use at Woolwich and Shoeburyness, was invented by Major Navez, of the Belgian Artillery, for measuring a very small space of time—such, for instance, as a cannon-ball would take in passing over a few yards. Before we proceed to explain this interesting machine, it will be necessary to remind our readers that an electric current has the property of magnetising soft iron, and also to mention the peculiar principle of the pendulum. This is that the same pendulum will always, within certain limits, perform unequal vibrations in equal times—that is to say, that a "seconds" pendulum will always take "a second" to make one oscillation, whether it be raised from the perpendicular 20 deg. or 5 deg. Consequently, supposing a seconds pendulum to be selected, we can take the arc it describes in one vibration, and, by dividing this arc into a scale of parts, we can suspend the pendulum at a fall; and at any period of its oscillation and thus describe the time it has taken to fall. The pendulum, before an observation, is first suspended, as in our engraving, at the left extremity of the arc, by means of a piece of soft iron in the centre of the bob, which is magnetised by an electric current through an electro magnet at the point of suspension. Connected with the magnet are two insulated wires, which pass away for two or three hundred yards, and terminate in the cell. The wood screen seven or eight yards in front of the gun, when the wires are joined so that the electric circuit is complete. The instrument on the left of the pendulum is called the conjunctor, and performs the following offices. At the top of it will be seen an electro magnet, which is connected by a wire with the battery and magnetises 120 ft. in front of the first—i.e., 150 ft. from the gun. These wires are insulated with gutta-percha, &c., so that they may be either buried in the ground or hung on posts, as in our Engraving. The electric magnet in the conjunctor retains a small weight suspended over a cup of mercury. This has a steel blade at the end, which is so adjusted that if the weight falls it presses it into the mercury. The pendulum has an index or duplicate pendulum (seen above), which is actuated by a light spring that it will fall and oscillate with the pendulum proper. Behind the pendulum is an electro-magnet, which has power to attract this index when magnetised.

Upon the gun being fired, the circuit cuts the wires of the first screen, and this de-magnetises the magnet in which the bob hangs to the pendulum. This latter commences to fall, and the index needle with it, about the same time that the ball has passed out of the gun through by the shot, the electro-magnet at the top of the conjunctor is de-magnetised, and the weight that rests in the mercury pressing down the steel blade, and completes another electric circuit, which magnetises the large magnet in rear of the pendulum, and clasps the index-needle against the arc on the one side. The pendulum has thus taken the distance which is marked by the index, and the time thus measured is that which the ball has taken to travel from the first to mimus the time necessary for the weight to fall in the conjunctor, and which the operator, before commencing, finds by means of the disjunctor, which is the instrument seen at the left-hand corner of our Engraving. A table has been prepared which shows the time for the pendulum to fall down any given space, from 0 up to 10 50-ths, and has to be referred to for any arc through which it falls when used as above. The time thus given has only to be divided into the distance between the screens, and the result will be the velocity of the projectile. By this contrivance a skilful operator is able to measure pretty accurately to the thousandth part of a second, and by a few experiments renders this instrument most valuable for artillery scientific purposes, and many most important problems have been solved by its use.

RATIONAL SPORTS.

THERE has not been much stirring in the racing world, which has a few heavy afternoons' work still to get through before the "season" fairly replaces the "silly." People are beginning to ask, and not without reason, respecting the magnificent racing prospects held out by the Alexandra Park Company. As its Two-Year-Old Prize, with £500 added, had closed a day or two before, with nearly 200 subscribers, we went one afternoon last week to have a look at the course. Part of it was completed, and part of it was half done; but the straight finish had only been staked out, and the Grand Stand was a nucleus. Not a stone or brick was to be seen, and its future site was occupied by a lodge and a small pond. We were told that the workmen had been off for some three weeks, and certainly there did not seem much prospect of their returning ready by June, unless very active action were taken. The course, as it now stands, is a huddlecoe, and the horses run round a very admirable cricket ground, with a couple of gentlemen attached to it. There will be a capital view from the side of the hill, but the palings will have to be very formidable, and the police very strong, to keep out "the free list," who are very chary of their sixpences at Hendon, especially when the water is low.

The steeplechase season has brought out a fresh cross-country star in Arcubut, "pedigree unknown," who has won at Worcester very cleverly, and also at Upton-on-Severn with 12 lbs. extra. On dit, that his owner only gave "a pony," and that he has refused £500 for him. Arcubut, owned in the new Radnorshire colours, is by Lord Hastings's present from me of luck, that the long banished Duke has reappeared at 18 to 1 in the Derby betting, which is not bad for two sons of Orlando and two sons of Stockwell, two of them bred by her Majesty.

Ascot seems to have fairly transferred its summer prestige to autumn. The first day gave us a close finish between three and a length between four, which almost made Mr. Rochford's head-dress not forgotten its handicap cunning. In the latter race (the Knowsley Nursery Stakes) Arkansas (7 st.), which caused the unfortunate repatriation between Lord Clarence Paget and Sam Rogers's pocket, did no good, as usual; and it seems hard that the riding of such a magnificent and vigorous jockey should be so little handicapped in connection with such a rip. The racing on Wednesday was only remarkable for the second victory of The Lion in another Nursery handicap, Jeremy Diddler's gains on hereby, and in so much shower of Fordham in his number of winning mounts that his brother's £100 bet with the latter was not a safe one. On Thursday, however, the advantage of riding more than 2 st. lighter.

The North Lancashire Steeplechase at Ridgway Club were divided between Falcon, Fiery Cross and Fingal (brother to King Death and Tullochgorum), all the property of Mr. Johnstone. Mr. Gibson's Gunner and Gunbat were the winners of the flat races. The latter was very unlucky, as he had a long, single-handed course in his first trial with Buccaneer, where both got unsighted; and just as even with Fiery Cross was such a near thing that many thought Mr. Bennett's cap might have come off. Mr. Fenwick's Grand Seymour brought another wreath to "Campbell's old dog." Marshal Forward seemed in his old form again, and divided the Clifton Cup with Mr. Gibson's Brown Bess, whose half-bred dodge Mr. Bowes divided the Lytham Cup with Julia Mannering by Cancadox. Donald Blue, a little dog of 5lb. weight, by Blue Rat, won the Hamplin Cup at the Longton meeting. Both he and Harkaway had a fall in the deciding course; and Sixty-Three and Black Hat were beaten in the previous heat. Mr. Campbell's Second Fly and York were in a fine style through the Brownlow Cup, and was only collared once by Cellar Hill. Mr. Campbell's second Fly also came before with his dog to Lord Lurgan's Lody Java, and was presented with the cup by his Lordship.

The Correspondencia of Madrid gives the following account of a fight between a Ceylon elephant and a wild bull:—"A bull which took place last week at Saragossa.—"The elephant was walking quietly about the arena when the first bull was released, and stood still to look at his foe. The bull, however, received his antagonist with great coolness, and threw him down with the utmost ease. The bull once more retired and made other charges, which the elephant received by lifting him with a thrust of his trunk some water offered by his keeper and the several cars of Indian corn. At last the bull was then released, and in a few minutes suffered the same fate as the first.

TRIBES OF THE SHIRE AND ZAMBESI RIVERS.

We have been favoured by Mr. Henry Waghorn, late surgeon to the Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Durham University Mission to Central Africa, with a set of photographic portraits, taken by Messrs. Lawrence, of Cuetown, representing a number of the men, women, and children of the Manganja and Ajawa tribes, brought away from their native country, which lies to the east of the Shiré River. Mr. Waghorn has likewise permitted us to make drawings of his collection of specimens of the tools and weapons commonly used by this interesting people, for whose redemption from a state of heathen barbarism such costly and laborious efforts have been lately made. It will be recollected that when Dr. Livingstone, after his arrival here in 1856, was entertained both at Cambridge and at Oxford with the most flattering scheme of approbation, a project was first entertained, which was revived in 1858, upon the visit of the Bishop of Capetown, for a special University Mission to the Zambesi and neighbouring parts of Central Africa. The result of this movement was a subscription amounting to some £20,000, by means of which a party of clergymen and others, with Bishop Mackenzie at their head, were sent out at the end of 1860. The history of their adventures is a romantic enough. They were escorted by Dr. Livingstone to his people some distance up the Shire, a tributary stream of the Zambesi, and fixed their habitation at Magomero, between the Shire and Lake Nyassa. They found the Manganja tribe, to whom this tract of land belongs, at war with the Ajawa, a ferocious people to the northward, and the whole Manganja country was overrun by an invading army. Under these circumstances, Bishop Mackenzie felt himself charged with the protection of the numerous fugitives and persons released from slavery, who were soon collected together at the missionary settlement. He had already with Dr. Livingstone's assistance, interfered more than once with the slave-dealers who infest that region, and compelled them to let go the captives whom they were driving to market. After Dr. Livingstone's departure, the Bishop complied with the entreaties of the Manganjas that he would allow the English and their servants to take part in the war, and drive the Ajawas out of the country. The Bishop and his other clergymen bore arms on this occasion; but Mr. Horace Waller, a layman, was appointed their military leader. A battle took place on the 16th of August, 1861, when the Ajawas, who numbered about 1500, were easily routed by 800 men of the Manganja tribe, guided by half a dozen English gentlemen previously unaccustomed to warfare. The invaders were pursued from village to village a distance of eight or ten miles. A great number of slaves or prisoners, whom the Ajawas had taken, were also delivered out of their hands, besides many women and children, who had been left sick and starving amongst the ruins of the Manganja villages destroyed by their ruthless foe. The Engraving on another page represents several of these poor people, together with three or four of the Ajawas, who were left behind and overtaken in their flight. The little girl, for instance, clothed in a sort of cloak up to her neck, who stands near the middle of our Engraving, is Dauma, a child picked up by Bishop Mackenzie himself and carried home on his shoulder on the day of the battle, while another little one was conveyed in a place of safety by the Bishop's servant Charles. This little girl is a Manganja; but the woman seen on the right hand, with a young child in a cloth suspended behind her loins, is an Ajawa, named Tawiri, the child's name being Ngopesia. The girl with a calabash or earthen vessel on her head is Halaiso, one of those who were liberated by Dr. Livingstone from a gang driven by two Arab slavedealers whom the English met near Chibisa, on the 16th of July. We are informed that all or most of these persons are now in Cape colony, and behave well as domestic servants. With regard to the subsequent fortunes of the Mission at Magomero, the chief cause why it has not well known. Besides the frequent disputes with the native chiefs, who more than once threatened the life or liberty of the English passing their way, the locality of their residence was found to be an unhealthy one; they suffered much from fever at the beginning of 1862, and the deaths of Bishop Mackenzie, followed by those of Mr. Burrup and Mr. Scudamore, might have deterred the authors of this establishment from any further attempt. Nevertheless, in the beginning of last year, a fresh expedition started, under the leadership of the Rev. W. G. Tozer, who was consecrated as Bishop to succeed Dr. Mackenzie; the Rev. Dr. Steere and the Rev. C. Allington being added likewise to the clerical staff. We need not here detail their more recent proceedings, or the causes which have led to a temporary suspension of the active work of the Mission. It is only requisite, in further explanation of the Engraving on this page, to give a double series of the various articles we have selected from Mr. Waghorn's collection of the utensils and weapons of these African savages:—

THE FARM.

THE death of Mr. Richard Booth, the venerable head of the shorthorn breeders, was by no means unexpected. It is about five years since he first broke down with rheumatic gout, on his return from the Warwick Royal Show; and, with the exception of being out once or twice last year, he had been virtually bedridden for some time past. There is no doubt that his strength gradually evaporated him; and for the last ten days he had lived entirely on wine and other stimulants. He was buried at Ainderby, near his residence, and was followed to the grave by nearly four hundred mourners. In consequence of these deaths not being generally known, very few shorthorn breeders were present from a distance. He had been one of them ever since 1817, when he went to Studley, where he sold off in 1834, and only retained his cow Isabella. About a year after that he succeeded to Warlaby, near Northallerton, on his father's death; and, with the aid of bulls from his brother John, who was an equally master-mind in breeding science, at Killerby, he built up his famous herd. In 1846 he brought out his heifer Bud; and as he has gone on with an uninterrupted line of cracks, of which none think Charity the greatest, up to his Baronet's gold medallist, Queen of the Ocean. The strength and constitution of his herd, closely in-bred as they were, may be judged of by the fact that Prince Bloom was his first prize-cow at Windsor in '51, and then he beat her at the Yorkshire that summer with Cherry Blossom, which had won for him at the Northumpton Royal four years before. At one time he had nearly thirty bulls out at hire, at all prices from £200 to £100, and sixteen of them by his Crown Prince, who was constantly kept "in residence." The herd at present consists of about sixty head, nearly half and half, but rather more females. He refused one, if not two, very large offers in his lifetime for them as a whole; but nothing is, to our knowledge, settled as to whether the family will keep them or part with them; and their determination on the point is looked to with no little anxiety. Warlaby comes to Mr. Thomas Booth, and he goes to reside there.

We hear that Mr. Eastwood's Esther by General Hopewell, and his celebrated prize-winner Rosette, have each had heifer-calves by The Hero. The highest priced heifer, Benny Bell, at the late Mr. Gell's sale was destined, it seems, for the Thorneyholme herd. Mr. A. Mitchell's new Mistletoe (as well as her second, Mr. Bowesian's cow) is duly qualified, with a half-calf, for the first Highland Society's prize, which she won against a great field at Stirling. It was stated by the critics in 1861 that she was modestly destined for her purposes by overfeeding; but she has had three live calves since then. Considering that they were not in great condition, Lord Suffield's herd sold well, as the forty-six, including some very young calves, averaged £27 2s. 6d. Some female lots went as high as 87 gs. and 61 gs., and five averaged 83 gs. Sir T. Beauchamp's bull Memnon (10 gs.) was the highest of the Baronet's five lots, which were sold after the sale; and he was bought for Lord Berwick.

The election for secretary of the Yorkshire Society takes place, we believe, on the 14th inst. The result creates a great deal of interest, and it is said that some strong canvassing was in progress as far back as the Howden Meeting. The place is worth 100 gs. a year, plus expenses. The election, we believe, consist of the president of the society, his Grace the Duke of Devonshire; the six vice-presidents, and the twenty-seven members of council. There are said to be a cloud of candidates; and, in addition to Mr. John Booth and Mr. Thomas Parrington, we hear the names of Mr. T. Scott, of Broomclose, near Ripon, and of Mr. Smith (once bailiff to Mr. Ambler), who has commenced business as an auctioneer, at Wakefield.

The election for the Smithfield Club takes place to-morrow of last year. Coloured rosettes are to take the place of prize cards on the prize cattle, and the winning numbers are to be exhibited on a placard in the gallery from that time till the close of the show. We have received an accession of thirteen members. The Birmingham Club have decided that no beasts shall be shown a second time, and are hoping all fat stock societies will have to adopt a still stricter rule of "No knife, no prize."

The monthly council of the Royal Agricultural Society was held last week, and the new session opened with a banker's balance of £2356 6s., which the arrears due on Sept. 30 swell to £4187. The Plymouth meeting will open on July 17, and the preliminary plan of the showyard, which comprises about thirty-five acres, is to be drawn on the scale of the preliminary plan at Worcester. The committee have recommended some improvements in the horse-boxes, and the contractor to the society has also been required to estimate the cost of boarding up the front of the cattle sheds to the height of four feet, and of covering over the yard. The list of the new members who have been elected, and a communication was received from the Foreign Office, on the subject of the Continental meeting in next May a general cattle and implement show will be held at Stettin, under the auspices of the Pomeranian Agricultural Society. There is a peculiar clause in the prospectus:—"Extensive purchases will be made of all kinds of articles exhibited, for the purpose of forming a lottery; and, in so far as exhibitors may deem it expedient, an auction of exhibited articles will take place."

The Metropolitan Board of Works paid a visit to Carlisle last week in their tour of inspection, to observe the result of the experiments for utilising sewage, which Mr. M'Dougall has had in progress during the last four years, in the Willow Holme, near that city. This gentleman's system of disinfection is said to have struck them as exceedingly efficacious and cheap—that is, it consists simply of lime and water, into which carbonic acid is allowed to trickle. The Willow Holme looked green and bright during last summer's drought, when all around was brown; and we hear that the first season the sewage was applied the grass was cut five times, and the hay brought more than the market price. Mr. M'Dougall considers that the disinfectant prevents the rot in sheep, and even cases of foot-rot have been observed to get much better when placed on the holme. In the former case, at Kelle, the "flukes," or larvæ, which the sheep nibble up with their food, and which work their way into the liver, the destruction which the disinfectant deals to them was proved by a microscopic comparison of a sod from Willow Holme with others from adjacent meadows, which were found instinct with animal life.

Mr. John Ryde, of Thirsk, distals pretty nearly the whole cultivation and uses of flax in the following letter. "I have studied the cultivation of flax, and have been a producer of it all my life, latterly about Leeds, and I consider that it is practicable to produce a crop of flax which will be twice as profitable as any other crop the farmer can grow. I know of many in Ireland who had more sown than they could get hands to pull and steep at the proper time, and they sold by auction at twenty guineas the acre. Where the crop has been properly managed all through, I have known seventy stone of flax produced from an acre, worth 10s. the stone, which is £35 the acre. A few days ago I was invited by some gentlemen to give my opinion on a new hackneen they are starting—viz., a flax retirey. They have bought 300 acres of flax this year; the bulk at present is worth £2000 profit. In Ireland only a few rumple the bolls, for cattle compounds. I always saved the seed, about Leeds, and the produce was an average sixteen bushels of good sowing seed per acre, worth 10s. per bushel, which I sent to Ireland to sow. The chaff and weak seed are excellent for milch cows, and when properly prepared will make six quarts of milk extra in the day. The quality of the water will make a difference of 1s. per stone in this flax; and a proper knowledge of chemistry is requisite to know the best water. It is of great importance that the crop be properly managed throughout, for there is a difference of £20 the ton when ready to spin. In Ireland grass and clover is sown with the flax; the fifth the land is in suits the small seeds, and the pulling of the flax in July and August loosens the land about the seeds. I have seen a good crop of grass and clover cut off at the end of October and carried to feed cows in the house. The next year the clover where the flax was grown is the very best for horse-feeding or making hay."

The Madrid correspondent of the Daily News writes:—"The maritime force of Spain is on a most formidable low scale. They have about twenty-seven steam-vessels of not more than 1100-horse power in the aggregate, the greater proportion of these vessels being of small tonnage."

M. Vigliani, the newly-appointed Prefect of Naples, is married to an English lady, the eldest daughter of the late W. H. Boys, Esq., of Betshanger, the niece of the late Sir Jaskon Collas Meredyth, Bart., and connected with the family of Lord Fitzhardinge Berkeley. Mme. Vigliani is the lady who was so highly spoken of at the time as having relieved and personally attended the sick and wounded after the battles of Magenta and Solferino.

A statement was published some time ago to the effect that Captain Semmes and about 100 of his men had sailed from Liverpool in a vessel called the Laurel, which also took out with the Alabama's large cargo of munitions of war. This statement was contradicted in the most positive manner; but a despatch has been received in Liverpool announcing that the Laurel had arrived at Funchal, that Captain Semmes was on board, and that that officer and his men, together with the three ships of the Laurel, had been transferred to a large screw-steamer, which is, of course, alleged to be a new Alabama.

There has for some time been a strong desire that there should be a general exhibition of the manufactures and works of art of all the Scandinavian States, and that it should be held in Copenhagen, in the same way that exhibitions of the same kind, which were first held in London, have since taken place in Paris and elsewhere. A committee for carrying into effect the wishes that had been expressed on this subject was therefore some time ago appointed, of which Prince Oscar was elected to be the president, and the report has been published, in which it is proposed—"That an exhibition of the products of the three Scandinavian States—Sweden, Norway, and Denmark—should take place in the summer of 1866, and that for that purpose a special palace should be constructed at the expense of the State and of the capital.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

THE dignity of labour found on Monday an eloquent advocate in Mr. Gladstone, who may be looked upon, we presume, as our future Prime Minister. The closing of the Islington Working Men's Industrial Exhibition was indeed a theme worthy of the subject of the Eloquent Chancellor of the Exchequer, and his speech was equal to the occasion. He reminded the "working man"—who, by-the-way, was there in great force, looking vigorous admiration on his chief—that he alone had no prerogative right to be called a labourer because he wore fustian and worked with his hands; that there were thousands, ay, tens of thousands of men in this country whose brains would reveal to their duty and worked as well as he. This is a new view of the upper ten thousand; but it is, let us be thankful, in a great measure a true view. Idleness is the vice of any class amongst the English; yay, a writer in Blackwood of this month fairly asserts that the nation has no idle class in the sense of the word as meaning, without work, as our German brethren. Mr. Gladstone took, as one may happily with the greatest wisdom take, an optimist view of the future; and in the fine hall, hung with the work—in many cases excellent work—of the brief leisure hours of the British workman, who would not do so? Here, a working boy had made a full-rigged ship; there, a man of business had produced that of a steam-engine; and in another place was a book of travel in an English county, illustrated and beautifully illustrated throughout with a loving knowledge which was touching, the work of a poor engraving compositor. The best thing, let us add, in a joint literary and artistic view in the whole exhibition. Mr. Gladstone may well take a hopeful view of our working men; and he added that in all parts of the country he found them that any improvement in their condition does not now depend upon Government so much as upon themselves—an improvement which was received with a hearty cheer. The Chancellor's assertion that progress in the future would be more gentle and accomplished by less hurtful means than heretofore was responded to warmly in the heart of M. Dasmarest, the bitonnier of the French Bar, who was, with M. Berryer, conferred by the Bar of England.

Perhaps of all memorable entertainments to which a man could be invited, whether it be a Lord Mayor's feast, a Shakespearian tercentenary, or a Ministerial whitebait dinner, that which took place in the hall of the Middle Temple on Tuesday was the most remarkable. If we read in the days of old of a play which Shakspeare's plays had been acted: it was not alone that one of the noblest and most consummate masters of men in England welcomed the only free and independent profession—in the person of M. Berryer—which has remained to France; there were other associations besides those so touching to the friends of literature. Mr. Berryer is one—the Nestor of his Bar—who has won for himself a work-day reputation for his honours, his eloquence, his wit, his fairness, and by his side sat Lord Brougham, who has run a similar career, but who has added, in his case, philosophy to it, and a taste to philosophy. Both were, indeed, to borrow a Transatlantic expression, "re-markable men, Sir;" and, indeed, the most remarkable men of their age in countries: and those countries—we prove it—do not tread upon anyone's corns—are certainly the two foremost in the world. Both men have such a weight of years on their heads—present seemed really to themselves to be the two foreign guests whom they delighted to honour; and if we could only have imported an equal number of swedish, we should have abounded in warmth of true gentleness of the Temple, the "late hour" at which, according to all rule, the guests expected should have been indefinitely protracted, and Flexi-street and the Strand would next morning have witnessed a throng of carriages—not of the sort with gentle satirist of the sketch, with "other youth from Thrace," that carries Bar costume and hat which have been so well illustrated by Gavarni and Henry Johnson.

We have also another visitor, of a different stamp and rank to that of M. Berryer—the Count de Montalembert, noted more as a writer and officer than as the historian of the celebrated "Defence of Sabstopol." He is here upon official business, and will stay with the Russian Consul at Liverpool: so we believe that he is not to be one of the inmates of the Army and Navy and the United Service Clubs to welcome as a friend and guest one who was to be a welcome guest to all.

On Friday week, in Kensal-green, and within a few steps from the grave of Thackeray, was laid out upon whose genius that author had written words so kindly and appreciative as any that he ever wrote. Round his grave stood almost all his contemporaneous and friendly authors, painters, engravers, journalists—almost never, perhaps, were seen so many men weeping bitterly at the loss of a friend. Many men had grown up to Shakespearian with this gentle satirist of the pencil; and many more, who had only known him by his works, knew that he was honourable, good, and just in all dealings to all, and felt that the place which his wife and well pictured English women homes must have been guided by one who loved his own. It was a noticeable thing, too, that in the Nonconformist cemetery, and under a sky as bright and warm as that of a spring day, stood very many of those fair English ladies, "the gentle-girls," as young men used to call them, whom the poets seem to have selected as his models, and that one or two sweet English children came and peeped at the coffin and the immortelles filled up with the deep green of ivy. It said that John Leech died from overwork, not occasioned by his Punch task, but by the number of illustrated journal had long formed a pressure him; but by commissions which he undertook of reproducing his sketches in oil—sketches like those exhibited some time back at the Egyptian Hall, which were not intended for sale. We may add that there is a movement on foot to erect a monument in the Charterhouse to the unselfishness, thoughtfulness, and generosity of the boy-side in Kensal Green; and it has been whispered that the Prince of Wales, who admired the genius of both author and artist, will contribute to it.

What has become of that large peace memorial which went over the water to the Emperor praying Alexander to commute the sentence of Mr. Brown overboard, or has Columbia received Britannia's little letter and put it into a memorandum-book? Not to be outdone in the way of human consistency! Mr. John Bright has illustrated his principles of peace like Cromwell, who took for his motto a Tuz quoque—that is, by putting Brother Jonathan on his back while Britain is to keep pegging away. Well, a man may do that if he likes; but Mr. Bright has a "call" insinuate that effete aristocracies and lovers of tyrannical Governments with the South to win in order that the great Republic may be disrupted. The longer the great Republic holds out the larger her debt will become, and unless some extraordinary fate is reserved for America, debt must produce its usual results. It is worthy of note that as the war rolls on it gets deeper and more intense in its fury. This is very natural, however much we may deplore the disregard of the negro in the social scale seems to be, as we have always said, inevitable. He is to be enrolled as a soldier in the South, and his position will certainly not be humble. So that Mr. Bright's ad hoc may now be changed in one word, and it will bear the truth of a prophecy :—

When black jobs blush in the top of war.

A review of Professor Max Müller's "Lectures on the Science of Language" has called forth a very remarkable and easily-proved assertion, which, if it be, we take it it is true, will go far to overthrow our belief in the chronology of geologists and naturalists which is according to Moses and Genesis. The reviewer states, in reference to the words ex guerras and fegos, "that the first is the oak, and the second the beech-tree; certain roots have succeeded each other at periods more or less corresponding to the stone, bronze, and iron ages." "But," says Mr. Archibald, "we moderns have witnessed in Canada West the same succession of trees, and with much rapidity that the so-called pine ridges east of Toronto are covered with oaks." It would appear, therefore, that the flora which is necessary for the wheat-growing, civilised man can be supplanted with exceeding rapidity.

On the subject of "Shakespeare's Own Prayer-book" Mr. Toulmin Smith has written to us to say that we have been misinformed, adding that he "never purchased nor possessed any of Ireland's forgeries, and would have been as little disposed to do so, as to give £100 for the spurious Shakspeare autograph in the "Florio Montaigne," which the British authorities bought at that price a few years ago." We regret that we should have been led into an error; but Mr. Smith will perceive, on looking at our paragraph, that we put that which we had received as an undoubted truth in the form of a query, not as a positive assertion.

CURRENT LITERATURE.

Lored at Last. A Story. By Mark Lemon. (3 vols. Bradbury and Evans.) The warm reception which was given by the public to Mr. Mark Lemon's first essay in the larger fields of fiction would seem to have made it incumbent upon him to vindicate that judgment by showing that it was not simply due to life regard he had earned by his numerous dramatic successes and by his admirable discharge of perhaps the most difficult of editorial duties. He has not hurried before the world with his second novel, as many writers have done in order to avail themselves of a sudden popularity; but, on the contrary, whenever he chose to reappear he would be welcome, he has taken a reasonable period during which to mature his new book. It is evident in the increased strength, and facility in handling the material of fiction is abundant in "Lored at Last." It is but justice to an author who had previously been favourably known by achievements in other literary spheres to point out that his difficulties are not diminished by the earlier education of his pen. The writer of "Lored at Last" has not to seek out a score or seventy dramatic works of various degrees of importance, from the romantic drama to the screaming farce, in which to display the range of author's habits of thought should to a considerable extent be influenced by the curious exigences of the stage. On the boards, provided that a story be interesting and well constructed, the author's descriptive operations' be wrought up, and that the dialogue be characteristic, success is almost certain. Endless waste of fact which have led the dramatist to select a subject repulsive to the public. Broad outlines and bold colour will generally suit the purpose. A fastidious stage-writing for the stage has generally shown himself, will go further, will endeavour to account for every incident and turn of story, and will work at his dialogue in a way that the novelist might be more grateful, if actors in general were capable of doing justice to delicate language. On the latter point, Mr. Lemon has shown himself sensitive, and such of his plays as have admitted of finished dialogue, especially his capital comedies, will be found to be written with a care and point which ought to be absent from the novelist's work. But the broad, bold handling which is essential on the stage, and the finished dialogue which is necessary for the reader, are alike out of place in a library or drawing-room with row walls to it, but which when the fourth wall is taken away resolve themselves into the very elements which is the substitute for that missing wall; or can comprehend the unwillingness with which an exceedingly smart or horribly savage speech is delivered by the actor who knows that he is only one of the playgoers, is sacrificed by the author of fiction to the judgment which tells him that the book is not a drama, and that the reader will never said in a private room. It is therefore no small credit to Mr. Lemon that he has abandoned so much mastery over the eye powers which the stage confers, and have gathered his many first-night laurels. No one, however, would be less gratified than the shrewd man of the world which he presides over, if he thought that he had not honestly told that he had entirely emancipated himself from all his dramatic habits, and had, in fact, become a thoroughly practised and successful novelist. In the certain assurance that he cannot write without making progress, and that his next and succeeding fictions—of which we hope for many—will show a marked advance, we have the increasing improvement in this respect, we will, before proceeding to notice the volumes before us, point out the defects that he has

Some tasks to learn, some frailties to forget.

Among the former we should be inclined to set down the habits of forgetting that a personal confidence is to be established with the readers and their conducts, and of leaving his people to take care of themselves. Another defect—perhaps more serious than any. We at once trace the absence of the first of these habits to the very best of motives—that of aiming at a higher object than mere amusement; but of the second we have no hesitation in pronouncing that it is an obedience from aught that is not essential to the march of the plot. The first chapters, for instance, of "Lored at Last" are, except in the broadest sense of the word, we fear that art will not permit him to do it, a mere touch by example only, and must all allow his men and women to plough on as many lun into praise or blame. He is their creator, and who are they that they should have the right to question his motives? We at once recognise that

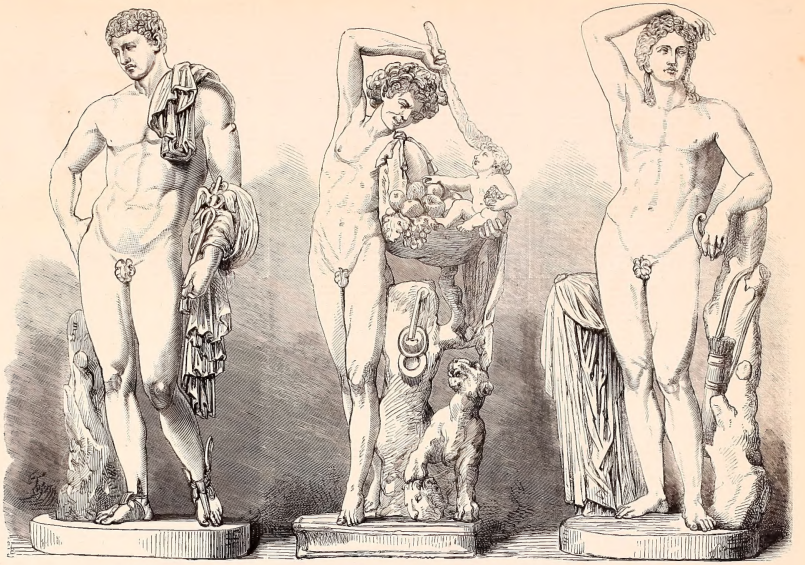
PROPOSED UNION OF THE BRITISH NORTH-AMERICAN PROVINCES.

HON. J. E. CARTIER, ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

HON. GEORGE BROWN, PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL.

HON. A. T. GALT, FINANCE MINISTER.

LEADING MEMBERS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA.



We learn by the most recent news from Quebec that the conference of delegates from the provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, and Prince Edward Island, who met in that city during a fortnight of October to discuss the best mode of arranging the terms of a definite political union, have arrived at a satisfactory result of their important deliberations. As the debates have been conducted with closed doors, it would be premature to comment upon any of the details of the proposed arrangement; but we observe that its principle seems to have obtained a general assent from public opinion in all those provinces, as well as the approval of her Majesty's Government, so far as we have had any distinct intimation of the views of the Colonial Office. The conference, opened in the Parliament House at Quebec, on the 10th inst., was presided over by Sir Etienne Taché, the Prime Minister of Canada. Its members were thirty-five in number, and they comprised some of the leading members of the actual Administration of each of the five British North-American provinces; their names and offices being as follow, with the provinces which were represented by them:—Newfoundland—Hon. Mr. Carter, Speaker of the House, and the Hon. Mr. Shea, Attorney-General; these gentlemen attend unofficially. Nova Scotia—Hon. Mr. Henry, Attorney-General, and the Hon. Messrs. Tupper, Archibald M'Cully, and Dickey. New Brunswick—Hon. S. L. Tilley, Provincial Secretary, and the Hon. Messrs. W. H. Steeves, Mitchell, Fisher, Chandler, Gray, and Johnson, Attorney-General. Prince Edward Island—Hon. Mr. Palmer, Attorney-General; Hon. Mr. Pope, Colonial Secretary; and the Hon. Messrs. Davis, Coles, Haviland, Hamilton, Gray, M'Donald, and Whelan. Canada—Sir E. P. Taché, Premier; Hon. J. A. M'Donald, Attorney-General, C.W.; Hon. G. E. Cartier, Attorney-General, C.E.; Hon. Alexander Campbell, Commissioner of Crown Lands; Hon. T. D. M'Gee, Minister of Agriculture; Hon. A. T. Galt, Finance Minister; Hon. George Brown, President of the Council; Hon. C. J. Chapais, Commissioner of Public Works; Hon. Oliver Mowatt, Postmaster-General; Hon. James Cockburn, Solicitor-General, C.W.; Hon. Mr. Langevin, Solicitor-General, C.E.; and the Hon. William M'Dougall, Provincial Secretary. These gentlemen have been received with the politest attentions by the Governor-General of Canada, as well as by the Quebec municipality and Board of Trade; showing that the project with which they are engaged is one favoured alike by the inhabitants of Lower Canada and by the advisers of the Crown.

It may be remembered that this October convention at Quebec was preceded in September by a less formal and authoritative gathering at Charlottetown, the capital of Prince Edward Island, where the subject was first mooted and the preliminaries of negotiation agreed upon. We are enabled this week to publish an Illustration of that event, which must hereafter be esteemed one of great historical interest. We refer to the view of Province House, Charlottetown, the building in which the deputies of Upper and Lower Canada, with all the maritime provinces, held their first meeting. It is from a photograph by Mr. G. P. Roberts, of St. John, New Brunswick. The portraits of Mr. George Brown, Mr. A. F. Galt, and Mr. G. E. Cartier, three of the leading members of the present Canadian Government, are engraved on the same page, from photographs by Messrs. Ellinson and Co., of Quebec.

"It appears," says a correspondent at Quebec, "that there are in reality no difficulties in the matter that threaten to be insurmountable, since all the colonies are desirous of union if their local Legislatures be preserved for local purposes. It is suggested, moreover, that the confederation ought to be known by one distinct name, which might be either 'Canada' or 'Acadia.' The colonists desire that their union may be erected into a Viceroyalty under the British Crown, and they would like to have one of the Royal Princes to reign over them."

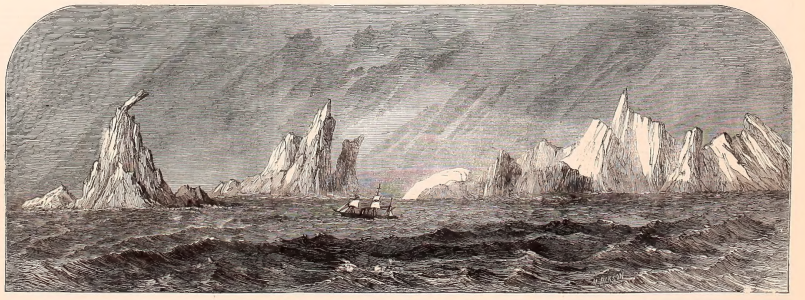
ANCIENT STATUES IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM, FROM THE FARNESE PALACE AT ROME.

ANCIENT SCULPTURE IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

THE pieces of sculpture which were lately bought for the British Museum from the collection in the Farnese Palace at Rome, belonging to the ex-King of Naples, are now at the Museum, and are thought to be of some importance. One of them is the celebrated Farnese Mercury, nearly identical in pose and scale with the Mercury in the Belvedere of the Vatican, and greatly resembling the celebrated statue in the gallery at Lansdowne House. We have engraved a representation of this fine statue. The figure on the opposite side is the unique ancient classical copy of the Diadumenos of Polycletus, so called from the athlete being represented in the act of binding a diadem round his head, one of the two acknowledged masterpieces of Polycletus, used by the ancients as a canon of proportions for the human figure. This and the Doryphorus were the two greatest works of that master. The figure in the centre of our Engraving is a Satyr, with the Infant Bacchus in his hand. The new purchases also include a magnificent group, with the statue of a Roman Emperor of the heroic size; the head, which appears not originally to have belonged to the body, is that of Caligula. Two other statues are an Apollo, a naked figure, of very fine proportions, but a good deal restored; Mercury and Hersé, also much restored; a well-modelled figure of a Macedonian king; and a male torso of the best period.

THE GREAT BRITAIN AMONG THE ICEBERGS NEAR CAPE HORN.

THE screw-steamer Great Britain, which arrived at Liverpool on the 26th ult., having made the passage from Melbourne in the short period of sixty-one days, passed through an extraordinary drift of icebergs on the 12th of September and two or three following days, in the neighbourhood of Cape Horn. We have been favoured by Mr. G. T. Horne, one of the passengers, with a sketch of one of the groups of icebergs and with a set of drawings which represent the fantastic shapes of each iceberg separately; but while the latter may be worthy of inspection for the sake of their scientific interest, we have preferred the general view shown in our Engraving. Ninety-five icebergs were seen on the first day, but the total number counted was 212. Sometimes the vessel passed a group of ten or twelve thickly crowded together. A very heavy sea was running, and the wind blew almost a gale, with snow-squalls every few minutes, and clouds as black as night. A small printed paper, entitled "The Great Britain Chronicle," which was edited by Mr. Hatton, another passenger, during the voyage, reports the occurrence of this phenomenon a fortnight after sailing from Hobson's Bay. "It is a wonderful sight," observes the journalist, "just like Dover cliffs floating along. We are surrounded by a complete sea of ice. Passed eighty-three icebergs altogether to-day. Captain Grey is very anxious; he and three mates and four men on the look-out; I think him a first-rate seaman." We may here remark that, towards the end of the voyage, Captain Gray, Lieutenant of the Royal Naval Reserve, who has been commander of the Great Britain for ten years past, received from the passengers a gratifying testimonial of their esteem. Mr. Petersen and the other officers of the ship, including Dr. Alexander, the surgeon, were likewise thanked by those who had been under their care.



The excavations at Pompeii have led to the discovery of a temple of Juno, on the flags of which were scattered about more than 200 skeletons. They are those of women and children who, during the eruption of Vesuvius, had hastened to the temple to seek refuge and to implore the protection of the goddess.

FINE ARTS.

THE NATIONAL GALLERY: NEW PROCESS OF RESTORING PICTURES.

THE National Gallery was reopened to the public on Monday last, after the usual autumnal recess. Frequently on the annual openings several new purchases, gifts or bequests, are submitted to the public for the first time. On the present occasion there is only one new picture, but that one is of very considerable value and interest in relation to the history of art. The subject to which we wish more particularly to call the reader's attention is, however, the application, during the vacation, to some of the finest works in the collection, of a process for renovating pictures—it professes to be nothing short of this—discovered on the Continent, and of which some mysterious, almost incredible, and occasionally contradictory, reports have reached the English art-public.

Let us, however, first speak of the new acquisition to the gallery. This, then, is a fine picture, by Carlo Crivelli, signed and dated 1482, and has been presented to the nation by Lord Taunton. It is painted in tempera, though Van Eyck's "secret" of painting in oil was known to and practised by several Italian painters at the date specified; but, notwithstanding that it is executed in a medium which afforded few of the resources of oil for securing richness and force by transparent glazings, it sufficiently indicates that feeling for colour which was one of the earliest as well as the most prominent characteristics of the Venetian school. We see here the germ of what was rapidly developed to such glorious results through the masters Jan Bellini, Giorgione, Titian, and Veronese. But, though the colouring generally is remarkable for the period, the flesh is poor; the design is hard, stiff, and archaic; the composition

MUSIC.

Mr. Macfarren's new opera "Helvellyn," produced at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden, on Thursday week, has been decidedly successful. Since its first performance it has had four repetitions, the houses have been uniformly good, and the applause has been both warm and discriminating. It is an opera worthy of the name of the first of English living musicians. Still, it is not equal to Mr. Macfarren's chef-d'œuvre, "Robin Hood," and this may be ascribed to the dramatic inferiority of the subject, which, we think, is neither very happy in itself, nor very skilfully treated. The libretto is from the pen of Mr. John Oxenford, but it is not to be compared to the English of a German drama by Mosenthal, the original author of the piece which Miss Bateman has rendered so popular in England under the title of "Leah," and which we may add, by-the-way, that the next character (it is said) in which this gifted actress is to appear at the Adelphi is that of Rosa Dartle, in "Edgar Allan Poe's" version of "Hellvellyn") is founded. We hope this is not the case, for the character is repulsive and disagreeable, as far as we know it from the opera, does not possess the dramatic capabilities of Leah. We do not think it necessary to describe the plot of "Helvellyn:" it is comprehensible and not confused, and can be rendered intelligible without dry and tedious details. Suffice it to say that the opera is in several instances to be heavy and sombre, a light pastoral drama—an idyll of English rural life—with the sensation horrors of an Adelphi melodrama. The scene lies in a Cumberland farm, occupied by Maddy, the widow and heiress of the late proprietor. During the festivities of a "harvest home" the sons of the family are disturbed by the unexpected return of Lake, the late farmer's brother, a reprobate, who has been turned out of doors, and now appears, after many years, to claim a share of his dead brother's inheritance. Failing in this scheme, he forms a scheme of deadly vengeance. Foiled in all these, and also discovered to have been the perpetrator of a murder committed on the heroine's lover, and in a paroxysm of rage and despair, and amid the fury of a storm of thunder and lightning, falls down a precipice and is rendered a corpse! The heroine is Hannah, whose father laboured under the stigma of the crime vainly committed by Lake. On her father's death she unexpectedly has left her a sum of money, the result of a run of a wandering beggar, and now appears as the farm seeking charity. This girl, therefore, is the only sympathetic character in the opera, and interesting young person; and the removal of the blot from her name, by the discovery that she is the child of an innocent man, is the best dramatic point in the piece. The heroine is mixed up with episodical scenes of love and jealousy, form the subject of a pastoral ballet, which is much admired, and deserves to be popular. Mr. Oxenford has done for it what might be expected from his talents. The verses are generally good, and well adapted to music; and Mr. Macfarren's music is such as might be expected from so eminent a composer. Its beauties do not lie on the surface. The inhabitants of Cumberland are not likely to be much enraptured—meaning—a remark which we especially address to those who may have been disappointed at not finding it full of the sparkling airs and melodies of Signor Verdi or Mr. Balfe. The best portions of Macfarren's opera are the scenes or concerted music—the trios, quartets, and finales. In such pieces Mr. Macfarren is at home with the masterly skill and the fire and animation which remind us of Mozart and Beethoven. The choruses are well managed, and in these are essential ingredients in an English opera, it being necessary for the composer to make an eye to the music-stop as well as to the stage; for the publication of the words is generally left to the expense of paper and print unless the songs made their way to the drawing-room pianos. We have left ourselves little room to describe the songs are of the usual cast, and commonplace enough; but others are in a higher category, and will be heard with pleasure. To obtain, it would be impossible to praise too highly the manner in which this opera is performed. It has been got up and brought upon the stage with liberality, and the "get up" is complete. The picturesque scenery of our English Alps is brought before our eyes by exquisite views, and the effect is heightened by appropriate costumes, a bright and quaint old dances of the country, are all presented with a truth of local colouring that is delightful; and Mr. Mellon's noble orchestra gives the full effect to it. Mr. Mellon's conductorship is unexceptionable. Every character has a fitting representative. The two heroines—for Maddy the proprietress is as well as Hannah the beggar's child during orphan girl—are personated by Mdme. Parepa and Mdme. Rudersdorff respectively, and the performance of both are masterpieces of acting and singing. The melodramatic character of Lake is powerfully acted by Mr. Lawrence, whose fine baritone voice is exceedingly effective. Mr. Santley, Mr. Martin, the gentlemanly tenor, is sustained by Mr. Haigh, whose beautiful voice is heard to very great advantage. Mr. Harrison, as the farmer's son, plays and sings with great success; and its run, we hope, will repay the great care and cost bestowed upon its production.

At Mr. Gye's opening, begun on Tuesday last his season of English opera at Her Majesty's Theatre; and he began it auspiciously, for the house was crowded to the doors, and the performance was received with great and deserved applause. "Lucia di Lammermoor" was given with great care and splendour, and excellently performed in every part. Mdme. Parepa, one of the Italian and English vocalists, is a favourite with the public, and any remarks on so popular a work would now be worse than superfluous; and the performance on this occasion resembled what had already been on the same stage. But the chief dramatic novelty was the appearance of Miss Louisa Pyne for the first time in the character of Lucia. We may say to those who have seen the best of the most charming representations of Scribe's heroine that have ever appeared on the operatic stage, that Miss Pyne surpasses all; and she has an equal it is only Adelina Patti. In everything—in face, person, manner, and action—she realises the ideal image created by Bellini's delightful music, and by the words. Her fine perfection of brilliancy, grace, and expression. Mr. Sims Reeves was the Edgar, and he was in excellent voice, and sang and acted the character more grandly or sang the music more beautifully than now. Signor Marchesi's excellent performance of Mephistopheles is well known. The character of Valentine was assigned to M. Gueck, a nephew of Malibran and Vieuxtemps, a young performer of great promise, who, together with his brother, a violoncello player, is the only child of his family. The little but interesting part of Siebel was exceedingly well acted and sung by Miss Cottrell, a young lady formerly favourably known at the Olympic.

The next novelty to be produced at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden, is an opera entitled "The Sorcerer," by Mr. J. R. Hatton. The drama is founded on Halévy's pretty opera, "Le Val d'Andorra."

THE THEATRES.

THE management of Drury Lane continues to deserve public encouragement for their conscientious conduct of the theatre. The revival of "The merchant of Venice" was accompanied by the care of the great tragedy on which Shakespeare expended such marvellous art and genius. Not only is it played by some magnificent scenery from the pencil of Mr. Beverley, but it is supported by really excellent acting. Miss Heath as Lady Macbeth; Mr. Phelps, as the guilty Thane; and Mr. Creswick, as Macduff, are all parts which seem to be specially suited for the Lady Macbeth of Helen Faucit is comparatively a novelty. Her reputation was made in other characters as a lady, as a queen, and as a woman strongly has not hitherto been considered her forte. But she has now thrown down the gage and dared the danger of loftier impersonation. That she has well performed the character as a lady, as a queen, and also provided herself with the ready command of all the resources provided by her art. She has, indeed, gone beyond them, and added a hundred of the sister arts, particularly of sculpture and painting. Not a pose but has its type in the statuary's studio; not a fold in her dress that has not been foreordained in her own chamber. The result is a performance that is highly artistic, and that presents a series of attitudes which might be sketched with advantage for the instruction of the art-pupil, whether in form, in colour, or in dramatic action. This is high praise, but it is well deserved, and may be given without the slightest reservation. In dialogue Miss Fawcett's delivery of the sleep-walking scene is perfect. She is her physique not being adequate to the demands made upon it; both in intention, and frequently in execution, it is so fine that we have rendered an opinion so admirable and comparatively nothing to censure. In her leading soliloquy, the various interviews with her husband, the banquet scene, and her mental prostration afterwards, she manifested various degrees of excellence, and produced points relative to which she has no rival or competitor. Her somnolent scene was not so good, having depths in it which mere art cannot reach, which indeed cannot be simulated, and can only be realised by an actress whose heart is in sympathy with the state of mind and body intended by the poet. Mr. Phelps, in Macbeth, acted with his usual taste and discrimination. His last scenes were powerful. Mr. Creswick, in Macduff, was also good; and in his interview with the young King and Rosse, remarkably pathetic. We can also report favourably of Mr. Barnes' Banquo. The witches, by Messrs. Belmore, Edmond Phelps, and Rooky, were admirable.

A new actress appeared at the Strand on Monday, in the pleasant little piece of "Domestic Economy." Miss Milly Palmer made her first appearance in the discontented wife. Perhaps Pauline never had a more charming representative; but we are not able to judge of her powers in characters that make a demand on the upper resources of experienced artists. Suffice it for the present that the young lady was well received, and gave satisfaction to the audience. We have great hope that in more arduous parts she will be likewise efficient.

The "Colleen Bawn" has been revived at the Adelphi, and, though of course there is a great difference in the cast of the characters, with every prospect of success.

By letters just received from Teheran, we learn that Major Champain, H.E. the officer employed to superintend the construction of the Persian line, was on the 26th of September last at Bagdad, in direct communication with Bombay by means of the line constructed by himself from Teheran to Bushire. Staff of the telegraph department:—Major-General Patton, chief; Lieutenant-Colonel Patrick Stewart, from Bushire to Kurrachee and Bombay, the distance from Teheran to Bushire being 700 miles. The time occupied in transmitting the first message from Teheran to Bombay was less than four hours and a half. Major Champain has also finished the line from Bagdad to Teheran, with the exception of about twenty miles, which is the subject of a boundary dispute between the Persians and the Turks, and which will be settled by the time of the latest advices, been allowed to connect, although the wires were actually within a few feet of each other. From this we understand that it was Major Champain's intention to connect the finished portions of the line by horse messengers three or four times a day with the nearest point of Turkish line. At the same time, the recently-completed Russian line from St. Petersburg to Teheran, will enable the two great monetary affairs an uninterrupted telegraphic communication between London and Bombay.

EXTRAORDINARY CASE OF CLERICAL MISCHANCE.—At the Northampton Quarter Sessions, last week, the Rev. Charles James, a clergyman of the Church of England, was found guilty, on three indictments, of obtaining goods by false pretences, and was sentenced to five years' penal servitude. The career of this unfortunate man has been equally of an extraordinary nature. He is a native of Oxford, and after receiving his early education at the Grammar School connected with Magdalen College by that University, he was entered as a gentleman commoner at Cambridge. He was subsequently ordained, and graduated with considerable honour. While at Cambridge he brought disgrace upon the clerical profession. Some years ago, during the severe illness of his wife, he was induced to officiate as a Curate in a small parish in the North Riding of Yorkshire, and being a good reader and preacher he soon became a favourite with the congregation. The Curate, however, had no sooner left home than the Curate began to show himself in his true colours. He dressed himself in a suit of clothes, took his wife's watch, and engaged in the unlighted calling of breaking in coin for the farmers. He made a pound of things at the business, and then he started again singing at a third, and generally returned to his lodgings in a state of intoxication. Such conduct could not, of course, be endured, and his curate was brought to a premature termination; but before leaving the neighbourhood he managed to obtain a good supply of meeting together a village carpenter of most of his kills unpaid. The next thing he did was to order a clerical dress of Messrs. Smith and Co., clerical tailors, Southampton-street, Strand; but the character of the fellow was discovered before the order was completed, and he was taken into custody. His ingenious method of raising the wind. A poor schoolmaster advertised an organ for sale for £50, and Mr. James, having applications for the purchase of it, consentually ordered it to be sent to Paddington station, to be left until called for. In the mean time he advertised the organ for sale, but was forestalled in the attempt to sell it by the landlady. He obtained goods from other tradesmen in a similar way.

THE NILE.—In our Number for Oct. 8, p. 371, we gave the heads of an interesting paper "On the Knowledge which the Ancients Possessed of the Sources of the Nile," by Dr. Vaux, a secretary of the Royal Society of Literature, recently published in vol. viii., part 1, of the Transactions of this society. In continuation of the same paper by Dr. Vaux, the same part by Mr. John Rogr, F.R.S., the foreign secretary of the society. "In one word," he says, "the ancient Egyptians considered Nubia very much down in nearly their true positions, and in several of which maps a large lake is placed near the equator, with great accuracy. In the map constructed by Isidor Ben Mosia, A.D. 833 (in the time of the great Caliph El Mamoun), a lake is placed in the position of the Victoria Nyanza, and another in that of the Albert Nyanza. . . . The ancient Egyptians must 130 years ago have been acquainted by John Scott, F.R.S. In this, at about 1 deg. of latitude south of the equator, a vast lake is seen, which may now refer to that of the Victoria Nyanza, extending about 2 deg. of latitude. Scott observes that this great lake is situated close by the source of the Negros." A little south ("et the world") by Scott, represents the same lake in a more accurate position, nearer to the equinoctial line, and in the Nubia Christiana (Nubia, a fourth map of Africa), by Walker ("Universal Atlas," 1811), leaving unquestionably the largest lake as the Victoria exhibits a narrow and very long sea, or tract of water, named "Lake of Zambre." This inland sea, greatly resembling the Lake Tanganyika, is placed in the same position nearly as only misplaced by one degree of longitude. Its northern extremity is given at about 4 deg. south of the equinoctial line, and its southern position not very far from meridian of 31 deg. of east longitude. A fifth map is by Lizars, of Edinburgh, dated in the year 1815; somewhat similar to that of Walker, entitled Joannis Imperium," and which is continued in the beautiful atlas of the engravers Gardiner and Kirkhaus, who is between them under the apparently "Mercator." This map represents Nilus flowing as issuing from an enormous lake, or rather an inland sea, in lat. 4 deg. south, and about 4 deg. of longitude in breadth, and bearing the name of "Zaire," or "Zembre Lacus." This lake, or sea, answering doubtless to the Lake Tanganyika. Reverend Mr. Rogr, published in the year 1823, represents, as Mr. Rogr says, "in a surprising manner, the actual condition of the interior of Africa, which is that of the Central Equatorial Africa—viz., as abounding in lakes, rivers, and mountains, and that the great parts of these maps which represent these explorations are lithographed in three plates by Mr. Nethercoth with great accuracy, and they have illustrated what was the actual state of the interior of Africa at the time when they were respectively published. Many geographers to whom these plates are known have considered them as valuable that some of these great lakes were known to exist. It will, however, be seen from Mr. Rogr's memoir that much of Equatorial Africa has been explored by various enterprising travellers who endeavoured to keep to themselves their knowledge of that fine and interesting country, in order to prevent any encroachments to their commerce with black and white goods—ie., slaves and ivory. Mr. Hogg, allowing every praise to the intrepid explorers who preceded him, has added many discoveries in these regions, and especially for their gallant passage through Africa from Zanzibar to the Indian Ocean, to the mouth of the Nile in the Mediterranean, shows, in fact, that there are many important problems to be yet solved as regards the geography of the course of the equatorial lakes—the river flowing into and issuing out of them, as well as the mountains and high lands there supposed to extend themselves. Mr. Hogg points out, in respect of the actual discovery of the sources of the Nile, that the River Kisangale, and the neighbourhood of Mount Kenia, is the commencement of the Nile. . . . Of this we have known for certain, being feelers of the Nyanza Lake, are two of the sources or head streams of the White Nile;" and also that "the only other head streams of the Nyanza, as yet partly known, are the River Mukingwa and Northern Nyanza, in the corresponding position to the Victoria Nyanza before a full account of the Nile and its sources to the present time should certainly consult the papers of Mr. Vaux and Mr. Hogg.

THE HON. MRS. GENVILLE FFRENCH.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

JOSIAH S. F. ADDISON, DERBYSON, and Others.—Yes, the matter in three moves is obvious enough. The composer must have said, what probably he meant, "Make the best move, neither more nor less." So would then have saved his own very ingenious idea.

J. R. (Bath).—1. Q to K B 4th (ch) 2. Q to K 4th (ch) 3. Mates in reply. 1. R to Q R 5th; 2. R to Q 4th; 3. R to Q 4th. 1. P mates.

TIRO.—Your composition admits of a very easy solution in two moves.—1. K to B 6th (best).

W. GIBBONS.—It shall be examined and reported on very shortly.

W. G. WHITE.—Your problem is very pretty, and we have tried, we believe, described position being as follows:—White—King at K 6th, Q at K B 4th, Kt at B 5th, P at K 2nd; Black—K at K B 5th, Q at K 3rd, Kts at Q 3rd and K 4th, P at K 4th and K B 4th. 1. Kt to K R 7th, and Q B 3rd. White, having to play, wins the game. The other position is not correct. Black—K at K 5th, Q at K 3rd, Kts at Q 3rd and K 4th, P at K B 4th and K 2nd. White—K at K 6th, Q at K B 4th, Kt at K 2nd, P at K 4th. White to play, and mate in three moves.
